FROM NEW JERSEY.

Bratal Attack upon a Conductor. Despatch to The Evening Telegraph.

BERGEN, N. J., Nov. 29.—Last night a man named BERGEN, N. J., Nov. 29.—Last night a man named Lee, formerly employed by the Jersey City and Bergen Horse Raliroad Company, entered a car with his wife, to ride to the Jersey City ferry. He had a package of tickets, and tendered one for his wife fare, claiming a free ride for himself. On this being refused he got off the car, and threw a heavy stone at the conductor, James McGaffey, hitting him on the head, and knocking him senseless. The injured man is in a dangerous condition. Lee is still at large.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29, 1869. New YORK, NOV. 23, 1863,

A Miserly Moribund.'

For half-a-dozen years an old gentleman who made it his sole occupation to accumulate money, has been gradually dying at Taylor's Hotal, Jersey City. He was a little man, with a little voice, and a little appetite, and occupied a little garret, and very little else was known of him. The great thing in his favor was that his board bill was punctually paid. favor was that his board bill was punctually paid. As regularly as Saturday morning came around the bill was presented and the money was forthcoming. The proprietor of the hotel might have possibly believed in the phenomenon of all New York and Jersey City being swept away by one immense tidal wave, but he never doubted, never could have come to doubt, that Mr. Lyman Allyn, the name of the moribund miser in question, would have proved a fraud; and neither did he. Ye who would read this brief biography expectant of such a denoument, are doomed to disappointment. The old gentieman, instead of making for himself a name which posterity and the Police News would not willingly let die, merely retired to his room last Friday evening, and having looked death in the face for the last five or six years, was stared out of confidence by him at last. In other words, he out of confidence by him at last. In other words, he died. To be slightly figurative, he went up in that unreturnable balloon which is furnished with no parachute to let the ascensionist return. On Saturday morning the hotel clerk, as usual, went up to the garret to present the weekly bill. He knocked repeatedly at the door, but received no answer. He pened the door and went in. The septnagenarian—the old gentleman was in his seventy-third year—instead of handing out the tin, maintained a solemn slience—solemn as death. It was death. He had succumbed, sitting at his accustomed desk. And this is the point at which his story becomes interesting. Nothing being certainly known about him, his desk and trunks were searched, and in them were found stocks and bonds to the amount of six hundred the search of a well dated fifteen years.

If I were an oroide-watch seller I might wear diamonds in my shirt bosom as large as Lima beans, and drive borses that Mr. Bonner would not disdain to sit beaind; for the oroide watch business in this city is an immense swindle, and brings in enormous returns to those who have sufficient genius to enzage in it. These returns are so great as to entirely over hadow the incomes derived from the legitimate pursuits of the genuine importers. About The City Amusements.

Like those figurative pigs which run about ready roasted, with forks stuck in them, and asking to be eaten, the limple countryman invites the swindler and assists his own reduction by his very guilelessness. It is thus that the most successful of these swindlers manages to make, occasionally, between thirty and forty thousand dollars per month. Connected with the "store" where the oroides are disposed of is usually a little lottery office, where the fool who has been guiled into committing one indiscretion is speedily helped to another. Many of the "full-jewelled" oroides, "adjusted so as to run equally regular in the extremes of heat and cold," sell for twenty-five dollars apiece, when their freal value is not more than fifty-five dollars per dozen. The pieces which constitute the movement of the watch are enclosed in briss cases, which cost scarcely seventy-five cents each; and the Waltham watches, to the eye of the credulous dupe, are imitated to perfection by the adoption of the genuine trade-marks, substituting merely a d for a t, and changing Waltham into Waldham.

Custem House Frauds.

Custom House Frands. The Collector of Customs at this port, the Naval Officer, the Surveyor of the Port, the Solicitor of the Custom House, and the United States District Attor-Costom House, and the United States District Attorney, have been holding a conference in regard to the frauds in the Custom House by false returns by the weighers of the weight of imported goods. Mr. B. G. Jayne, an officer of the Custom House, made affidavit to Commissioner Osborn that the agent of a certain Water street firm of this city gave to several weighers in the Custom House large sums of money in consideration of their procuring false returns in the weight of a quantity of coffee. This affidavit is the cue to a number of similar transactions, and the agent thus accused of bribing has been arrested and committed in default of $7000 bail. MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

" Enoch Arden" at the Walnut. Tennyson's genius is idvilic rather than dramatic, and with the exception of Charles Reade, who has worked upDora into quite an effective play, by infusing into the subject a good deal of his own vigor, the dramatists of the day, although tempted sorely to avail themselves of the poet's popularity, have been beffled by the unpromising nature of the materials. And yet throughout his poems there are good dramatic hints that a man who had some original ideas of his own might easily convert into exceedingly effective pieces for the stage. The playwriters of the present day, however, are not men of original ideas; they find it much easier to borrow than to invent, and they require the items of plot and character to be all prepared for them before they can begin, and the consequence is that the credit of the success of a new play is generally due to somebody else than the ostensible author. Thus in the stage adaptation of the story of Lonch Arden, which was produced at the Walnut on Saturday, any impression that is made upon the andience is owing to the intrinsic merits of the subject and the efforts of the restage than to the writer of the play. This poem is more dramatic in style and substance than any of the other writings of Tennyson, and it ought to make a much more powerful performance on the stage than Dora. To do this, however, would require a clear perception of the strong points of dramatic interest in it, and the ability to bring them prominently forward. This ability Mr. Arthur Matthison apparently lacks, as he has done little more than to take the bare outline of the story as Tennyson gives it, and to put it into dialogne. The poet follows the poem very closely, and the original features of the play consist in the introduction, as comic characters, of a drunken husband for "Miriam Lane," and of "Dr. Grammitt," who appeals in a mild way to the risibles of the audience by the tolerably well-worn device of interlarding his speech with misquotations of Shakespeare and the Scriptures. There is necessi Tennyson's genius is idvilic rather than dramatic, and with the exception of Charles Reade, who has story, but this is a very poor sort of fun, and yet it is about the best thing in the play. Mr. Matthison has managed to squeeze nearly all the poetry out of his subject, and his drama is very far indeed from representing the Encch Arden of Tennyson. Any reader of the poem will see that the strong dramatic points of the poem are the departure of "Enoch," the courtship of "Philip Ray," and the return of "Enoch" to find his wife married to his rival, and his determination not to disturb her happiness by declaring htmself.

The departure of "Enoch," to which the second act is devoted, does not realize all that the situation is capable of, and the courtship of "Philip" in the third act is exceedingly brief, and the playwriter has falled to represent with any vigor the strong pressure that was brought to bear upon the deserted wife to induce her to marry a second time. The greater part of this act, indeed, is taken up with the nutting party and a dance by the villagers, to the nueglect of the true dramatic requirements of this portion of the piece, and "Enoch's" return is the subject of one very brief scene which falls altogether to rival the pathos of the original. "Enoch's" sojourn on the island might also be made much more effective than it is, and it is certainly a matter for surprise that any man who makes any pretense to being a dramatist should miss so completely the The departure of "Enoch," to which the second being a dramatist should miss so completely the obvious chances for producing the strong stage effects that this subject offers. One of the worst features of Mr. Matthison's version of Enoch Arden is that it gives the actors but little opportunity to do themselves or their subject justice. Mr. Walcot gives a good personation of "Enoch," and in the island scene and the scene in the last act, when he looks in at the window and sees his wife and children sitting around the hearth of "Philip Ray" happy and contented, he acts with much power and pathos. Miss Annie Graham plays the character of "Annie Lee" with an excellent appreciation of its requirements, being a dramatist should miss so completely the Annie Graham plays the character of "Annie Lee" with an excellent appreciation of its requirements, and Mr. Morrison makes the most of the small part of "Philip Ray." Mr. Bailey gives a good personation of the eccentric "Dr. Grammitt," and Miss Rose Wood is entitled to credit for a spirited personation of the boy "Walter Araen." Mr. Fawcett indulges too much in mere buffoonery as "Peter Lane," forgetting, as he too often does, the legitimate functions of the comedian, merely for the sake of exciting a senseless laugh among the more thoughtless of the andlence. If this gentleman would learn his of the andience. If this gentleman would learn his lines, and abandon his mane attempts at being funny, devoting his attention instead to a representation of the character entrusted to him, he would descrie praise much oftener than he does, The "X. T. K." in Queer Company.

Quite a large audience assembled on Saturday evening last at the Natatorium Hall, on Broad street, below Walnut, to witness an entertainment of a novel character, the programme for which announced "B. F. Duane, X. T. K., in his ninety minutes in Kweer Kompany, or Song and Chit-Chat, with Sketches of X-centric Karacter. Mr. Duane, we believe, is the youngest son of the late William J. Duane, Secretary of the Treasury under President Jackson, and has himself held a position in the Treasury Department, whence his soubriquent of "X. T. K." or Ex-Treasury whence his soubriquent of "X. T. K." or Ex-Treasury Clerk. His entertainment was exceedingly laughable, and throughout the evening the audience was convulsed with merriment. He possesses that extreme flexibility of countenance which enables him to contort his features into almost every conceivable shape, and added to this is a good quality of voice and fair dramatic ability. The programme for the evening embraced various burlesque representations, tantalizing bits of song, and a general medley of eccentricities, all of which were given in a manner which predicts for Mr. Duane a creditable success as a delineator of eccentric character.

ONCE AGAIN. Thousands of our citizens have most pleasant recollections of the great "Executor's Sale" which occurred about a year ago at the Oak Hall Clothing House of Wanamaker & Brown, and with good reason do they remember it, for it gave them a year's supply of cloth-ing for money that would ordinarily have hardly bought one suit. All these and many more, who now acknowledge that they missed it in not patronizing the great sale last year, will rejoice to-day at the announcements of another great sale similar to the last, and holding out to buyers every inducement of low prices, deductions, and discounts, which made the "Executor's Sale" so popular and successful. There is something wonderful in the sight of Four Hundred Thousand Dollars' worth of made-up (llothing, piled heap upon heap, filling every nook and corner of the six immease stories of the great buildings at Sixth and Market, and there is something wonderful in the low figures which have been marked upon these goods, but most wonderful, we imagine, will be the sight of the eager throng who are already beginning to flock to Oak Hall.

WE REG to call your attention to the sale of Superior Sheffield Plated Ware and Table Cutlery, to be held at T.
