REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS. In Two WORLDS. By William H. Holsomb,

M. D. Published by J. B. Lappincott & Co. The resurrection of Lazarus is one of the most remarkable events recorded in the New Testament. It is remarkable as a manifestation of the supreme power of Christ, and for the silence of the Evangelists concerning the future career of the man thus restored to life after having lain four days in the grave. We have given us a simple narrative of the facts of the death, burisl, and revival of Lazarus. with a glimpse of the intimate and loving relations of Christ with his family, and then the event is dismissed as if it was too sacred a subject to be discussed. Here was a min who had been recalled from the sphere of spirits by Christ himself, and yet for some inscrutable reason he was not permitted to make any revelation with regard to what he had seen and heard in the world beyond the grave. It is useless to suppose that there was no curicsity upon the subject at the time of the performance of the miracle, as there has been ever since, but after the narrative of his resurrection Lazarus does not appear in the sacred record, and he is merely incidentally mentioned in connection with his sisters and the other disciples. He took no prominent part in establishing the Christian Church, and, except on account of the miracle that was performed upon him, his influence in promoting a belief in the divinity of Christ was less than any of the other disciples mentioned. Indeed, we are not even informed that he was a disciple, and his future course is as much a mystery as his death and resurrection. Throughout the entire Scriptures only the most indefinite hints are given as to the actual condition of the souls of men in the land of spirits; no revelations are made that will give the slightest glimpse of heaven or hell, and we are simply taught in positive but general terms that men will be blessed in the one or cursed in the other as their deeds may be good or evil while living upon earth. The mysteries of the future, for reasons that it is useless to speculate upon, are hidden from the eye of the human race, and there is a manifest impropriety in the attempts that are sometimes made to tear aside the veil that a wise Providence has interposed between the finite and the infinite. Fools rush in, however, where angels fear to tread, and the public of late has been treated to a number of works presenting theories of heaven which are chiefly remarkable for their trivialities and absurdities, and for the reckless disregard for the most sacred things that writers of little ability and less judgment only could indulge in. Such works as "Gates Ajar," and others of its class, are, in our humble opinion, positively injurious to the cause of true religion, whatever the intentions of the writers may be. They disgust one class of readers. and they cater to a depraved and unhealthy religious taste in others. They excite the imagination of the weak and credulous by descriptions that have no warrant in the Scriptures, and that proceed only from the imagination of the writers; and they are asmuch as they trespass upon the most sacred mysteries of religion, and pretend to reveal what the Almighty has decreed shall be hidden. The author of the work before us makes a specialty of this dangerous and-we are almost disposed to say-blasphemous species of literature. "Our Children in Heaven," and "The Sexes Here and Hereafter," are the titles of two of his works published within a comparatively recent period, in which he attempts to give a description of heaven and the condition of the souls of men after death. "In Both Worlds" is an even bolder infringement on the proprieties of religion, for in it Dr. Holcomb takes up the story of Lazarus, and undertakes to relate his experiences in life, death, and after resurrection. In a prefatory chapter the writer pretends to have become possessed of an ancient Greek manuscript which turns out to be an autobiography of Lazarus, and the body of the work is this narrative presented in what Dr. Holcomb calls "a dress of the nineteenth century." If we have any doubts as to the propriety of dealing with such a subject as this under any circumstances, we have none at all as to the insufferable bad taste in which it is treated in the work before us. To have such a narrative as that of Lazarus worked up in the sensation style of one of Sylvanus Cobb's Ledger stories is simply shocking to any person who has a real reverence for sacred things. It would be perfectly useless for us to go through the book and point out the anachronisms, the false coloring, and the other artistic absurdities that abound on every page, for it would not be worth half-a-dozen lines even of condemnation, if it were not a profanation of a subject the most awe-inspiring. As a specimen, however, we will mention that, on page 45, the uncle of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus is represented as smoking a handsomely-ornamented pipe, "curiously carved and twisted," Dr. Holcomb being apparently oblivious of the fact that smoking was not an Oriental custom until after the discovery of America, when tobacco was introduced to the nations of the Old World. This might be passed by with a smile if it was not in perfect keeping with the rest of the story, and even then it is nothing to the outrageous bad taste of representing Mary as "sweet" on John the Baptist, just as pious young women of the present day are apt to have a tender feeling for good-looking and popular preachers. Martha, too, has a little love affair with a handsome young "son of the desert," a companion of the robber Barabbas, who turns out to be one of the thieves crucified by the side of Christ, and Lazarus has Mary Magdalene assigned him for his spiritual wife, and he beholds her carrying heavy beams and assisting to construct his mansion in the heavens. This is what Dr. Holcomb calls giving the story of Lazarus a

"dress of the nineteenth century," and it is possible that it may find admirers, for, unfortunately, such clap-trap will often be read by those who have no taste for sound instruction and the simple narrative of the Scriptures. The style and substance of this sensation novel-for it is nothing else-are puerile in the extreme, and the total lack of dignity and appreciation of the awful importance of the theme are among the worst features of the book. It appears to us that the author pronounces his own condemnation when he puts these words in the mouth of the father of Lazarus when instructing his son on his entrance into the spirit world:-

"To seek to generate the veli which separates the spiritual from the natural reaim, to invite an open intercourse with spirits, to consult them about earthly affairs, is one of the terrible crimes denounced and forbidden in Scripture. It is the secret source of the power and mysteries of magic. To seek such intercourse is perilous to the soul's best welfare. Therefore it is that consulting with 'fami-liar spirits' is forbidden in the Word. It is forbidden

We do not dispute the devout intentions of the author of "In Two Worlds," but it should be borne in mind that more harm is done to the cause of religion by perverted enthusiasm than by open scoffing. The investigation of spiritual mysteries is apparently a monomania with Dr. Holcomb, and he neither has the mental capacity to treat his subject in the dignified style that it demands, nor the fine sense of propriety that would keep him from making it ridiculous. Such books as this writer turns out ought never to be written or published, and if put before the world it is the plain duty of those to whose judgment they are submitted to condemn them in toto. We do condemn "In Two Worlds" as utter trash, and as a profanation of a sacred theme, such as is calculated to do great injury to religion and to exercise a most unhealthy influence on the minds of excitable

-J. B. Lippincott & Co. also send us "Erling the Bold," a tale of the Norse Sea Kings, by R. M. Ballantyne. This story is founded on historical information contained in the "Heimskrinigla, or Chronicles of the Kings of Norway," by an Icelandic author. It is a bold and stirring tale of the old Norse rovers who conquered and settled in England at various times between the fifth and eleventh centuries. The narrative is interesting of itself, and it gives an excellent description of the manners and customs of the rugged race who inhabited the north of Europe at the dawn of modern history.

-From Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger we have received the following of Harper & Brothers' recent publications:-

"Lost in the Jungle," by Paul Du Chaillu, is a description of the adventures of that traveller in equatorial Africa, and it may be considered as a supplement to his "Stories of the Gorilla Country" and "Wild Life Under the Equator." Mr. Du Chaillu is a pleasant writer, and the worst we have to say of this book is that he underrates the capacity of his young readers, and often descends to unnecessary trivialities of style. The work is one, however, that any boy will enjoy theroughly. It is profusely illustrated, and bound in attractive style.

"My Enemy's Daughter," by Justin Mc-Carthy, is a novel of much power that has just been concluded in Harper's Magazine, and is now published complete. Mr. McCarthy worse than other forms of sensationalism, in- is well known as an able essayist, and in this story he proves himself capable of doing good work in the more important field of fiction.

-From Turner Brothers & Co. we have received "The Trotty Book," by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. Published by Fields, Osgood & Co. This is an amusing narrative of the adventures of a young humorist, and it will doubtless find plenty of appreciative readers among the young folks, who will be able to sympathize fully with Trotty's sayings and doings. The book is nicely printed and bound, and it is illustrated with a number of clever designs by Eytinge.

The same house sends us "Christmas Day: the Night Before and the Night After." This gaily-colored brochure contains the ever popular "Night Before Christmas" of Clement C. Moore, which always reappears in some shape or other about this time of the year. A continuation by J. W. Watson, in the same strain, entitled "Christmas Day," and a parody by "Punch," called "The Night After Christmas," make up an excellent collection of holiday verses.

Turner Brothers & Co. also send us Our Boys' and Girls' Magazine for December 11. -From T. B. Peterson & Brothers we have received "Petersons' New Cook Book," which contains receipts for preparing all manner of eatables.

-"The Old Franklin Almanac for 1870," published by A. Winch, No. 505 Chesnut street, is, as usual, full of carefully prepared and valuable statistics. The record of events, foreign and American; the necrology, foreign and American; the lists of civil and military officers of the United States: the railroad disasters, executions in the United States, the governments of the world, etc., are very complete, making this one of the most convenient works for ready reference now published.

-Van Nostrand's Eelectic Magazine for December has an able paper on "The Late Ordnance Committee," evidently written by some one who has a full knowledge of the wire-pulling in the case of General Dyer, and of the influences that were brought to bear upon Congress to induce the suspension of that officer from the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department. This paper shows up a most scandalous state of affairs, and it will be difficult for some of the members of the committee who reported against General Dyer to get over many of the statements made. The rest of the magazine is made up of excellent selections from the best American and foreign engineering publications, some of which are of great value.
