NEW.YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent. NEW YORK, Jan. 37, 1870.

The Thompson Pictures.

A private view was last Saturday evening given of the pletures collected by the late Mr. Thomas Thompson, of Boston. They have been publicly exhibited every day since at the galleries of Leeds & Miner, at the southwest corner of Twelfth street and Broadway. Mr. Thompson, you will recollect, was the miserly connolsgeur who spent all his money in the collection of works of art, mostly pictures, which never saw the light when they were once in his pos-session. True, he took enough care of them to save them from the ravages of mice or molsture, but they were literally barred from the world in the wretched rooms which he dignified by the name of home.

They are twelve hundred in number, and treat of every variety of subject, although the sensual element is perceptible in a great number of cases. The most voluptuous gems are placed n a little apartment by themselves, communication to which is through a secret door. Visitors to the private view on Saturday were edified by the spectacle of a spring being pressed in one corner a little more elaborately festooned. with pictures than the others. The spring opened the door, and through the door the favored few-mostly white-haired old gentlemen, with red complexions, as though random blushes had got there by accident and couldn't get away again-vanished to gloat over the fancy flesh-tints that were lavishly provided for them beyond.

The Prince Arthur Bull. The committee of thirty-five or forty gentlemen who on Monday afternoon met in one of the private parlors of the Astor House, have agreed upon a plan for being hospitable to the royal adolescent who calls the Prince of Wales his brother. The result of their deliberations is that a banquet is to be given at Delmonico's next Tuesday evening, to be succeeded by a ball. It is pleasant to notice that the preparation for the festivities is being quietly made, and to have reason for believing that they will not be made the occasion for mere show and shoddyism. Prince Arthur has done nothing to deserve being Jenkinsized. He has conducted himself like a modest and sensible young man, desirous of pleasing without yielding to every vulgar caprice of society, and of preserving his own dignity, without burlesquing the spirit of exclusiveness. He has shown himself a Prince Charming, who contrasts like an angel of light with that batch of scapegraces, the Prince of Wales and Prince Alfred. It has not been breathed about him that he ever visited Madame Schneider, or would have liked to, and the public has been given every reason to suppose that his constitutional bashfulness is such that he would blush up to the eyes upon being invited to witness such a barbarian dance as Alfred lately asked for on one of the islands of the East. I advise all Englishmen who believe in "r'yal" blood to continue to worship at the shrine which they have erected to this blooming young Sir Galahad. As for the youth himself, he carries about with him a dreadful responsibility. His conduct has thus far been so perfect that the imminence of a first fauz pas becomes every day less to be averted.

New York Fashion Writers. Fashion writing is not a very elevated branch of literature. That I am willing to admit. It does not give much room for the play of imagination. The writer is surrounded by a set of fine words, the inventions of French modistes. and of these she is expected to make the most use, in causing them to express to perfection all the sinuosities of Fashion's phraseology. Still, among the many New York fashion writers are one or

OBITUARY.

The Dake of Broglie. The cable announces the death of this distin-guished French statesman, who was born December , 1786. Soon after completing his education, he began his administrative and dipiomatic career, being entrusted with different missions in Illyria, Spain, Warsaw, and as a member of the suite of the Abbe de Pradt, in 1612-13, at the Congress of Prague. After the rest wation of the Bourbons, he was made a peer by Louis XVIII, and in this capacity sat in judgment on Marshal Ney, speaking earnestly in his favor, and voting with the minority against putting him to death. He married the daughter of Madame de Staei, who had just then written her frank and powerful work on the French Revolution. Although his wife was a zealous Protestant, and the duke as zealous a Roman Catholio, they lived happily together until her death in 1909. His first political acts necessarily threw him into the opposition. He supported, against the various ministers of the Restoration, different measures of reform, and advocated with great eloquence freedom of discussion and freedom of the press. In a multiplicity of questions he showed himself a good economist and jurist, while the sincerity of his convictions and the vigor of his logic, joined to a certain sharp irony, establiahed his reputation as an orator. In 1828 he founded the Revue Francaise, to which he contritributed several articles anonymously. The revolution of July made M. de Broglie a doctringirs throughout the whole of the reign of Louis Philippe. He did not fear liberty, but he was afraid of the democratic tendency which the revolution had encouraged. He acted for a few days as Minister of the Interior, and yielded his position to his friend M. Guizot, a bolder organ of his own ideas, contenting himself with the portfolio of Public Instruction in the first ministerial combination attempted by the new king. Both men were obliged to give way to the Lafitte mainistry, then better suited to the temper of the times. Associated with M. Guizot. M. Thiors, and Marshal Gerard, he he formed. October 11, 1852, a ministry that had a longer existence than most of those which held office under Louis Philippe, and in this cabinet he had the portfolio of Foreign Affairs. His principal act in that capacity was the arrangement with England for the suppression of the slave trade. He retired from the ministry April 4, 1554, in consequence of the rejection of the law on the American indem-nity, but was recalled by the king the month after to the same portfolio, and with the title of President of the Council. It was under his presidency that the famous laws respecting the press, called the laws of September (1835), so contrary to the principles he had maintained on this subject under the Restoration, were passed. In 1836 he retired finally from office, on account of an adverse vote of the Chamber, and thus caused the dissolution of the ministry. M. de Broglie withstood every solicitation to take office sgain. With regret he saw the destruction of the royalty he had assisted in founding in the revolution of February, 1548. For a time he was slient, but after the election Assembly, and proposed the law for a revisal of the Constitution, in the hope of reopening the door to a monarchy more in harmony with his choice. The coup d'dat brought about an order of things he never expected, and he has since lived in retirement two who do the business with all the brains that. from its very nature, it will admit of. I could give you one of their fashion articles to read, and you would say-from little remarks and smart, original hits here and there-that the author might write essays more bright and less fuppant than those of Gail Hamilton. But what is a poor woman to do? she would very naturally ask on being told this. She has a permanent engagement upon a newspaper, say at ten or fifteen dollars per week. for furnishing a weekly article, the privilege of affixing her name to what she writes, and the perquisites of being able to make bargains with the establishments whose wares she examines incidental to the preparation of the article. It is doubtful, whether she would make more as a fugitive periodical-writer, and she would assuredly not have so many readers. One such fashion-writer I know, who affects to despise her profession, and who has such a horror of being identified with female Bohemians that she never appends her real name to what she writes, but uses a fascinating nom de plume. She is, herself, a fashionable and elegant woman, and the society among which she moves never suspects that she is the author of the articles which are their criterion.

That Horse and that Street-car. I regret that there is a disposition to receive with contumely and scorn the account now going the rounds of the newspapers, in regard to a horse and a street-car, which lately got mixed up with one another in one of the avenues of this city. The account was at first received as a wild reportorial exaggeration, so wild that I hesitated about repeating it. All the facts are substantiated, however. There is no incoherency in them. All the incoherency was in the horse. He had just been bought by Mr. Redmond McQuade, of Centre Market, at the Bazaar, at the corner of Forty-third street and Fifth avenue, and was being ridden bare-back, without a bridle, with merely a halter-strap passed through the mouth. At Twenty-ninth street the horse, with one of those equine fits of nervousness that are the "nature of the beast." took fright and rushed with uncontrollable speed toward Fourth avenue. A car was passing at the time, but this was too slight an obstacle to deter him. He dashed through the side of it, splitting his rider's face almost in half, tearing off one of the stanchions of the car below the windows, and creating indescribable confusion among the dozen passengers. The rider was thrown senseless to the pavement, and is slowly recovering. The horse turned around composedly and allowed himself to be walked ouletly out of the rear of the car. The passentgers, none of whom were seriously hurt, pleked themselves up and got out without asking for heir money back. The car was removed to the depot, and a reporter passing by told the tale. And if you don't believe me, come to New York and I'll show you the car! ALI BABA.

bogus, and corrupt Government from beginning From the N. Y. Herald.

From the N. Y. Herald. "The upward movement in gold was stimulated by the heavy bids from important houses at the Gov-ernment sale to-day, and the price advanced to 122. The lowest price was 121%, and the closing figure 191%. The bulls are encouraged to buy from the fact that the Western farmers are withholding the balance of last fail's crops, expecting that they will be able to get better prices when gold takes the generally looked-for advance in the spring and summer. The exports are, moreover, on a fail-ing scale for the new year, and the decrease this week as compared with last is half a million of dol-lars. The heaviness of American securities in Lon-don is apprehended in some quarters as a prelimi-mary to their reshipment, particularly as they now encounter the rivalry of the new Russian loan. The 67's were at one and a quarter per cent, lower to-day nary to their resinplicit, particularly as they now encounter the rivalry of the new Russian loan. The 67's were at one and a quarter per cent, lower to-day in London, but closed better. The bids for the Gov-ernment gold were for a total of over seven and a quarter millions at prices ranging from 120's to 121'70. The awarded lots were as follows:-906,500, 121'65; $45,000, 121'56; $10,000, 121'70; $4500, 121'05; $9000, 121'65; $10,000, 121'66; $10,000, 121'67. "The domostic market for Governments was not unfavorably affected by the character of the foreign market or by the reports the the German bankers hava of late been large sellers on foreign account. Prices were active and somewhat unsettled, but closed at the best figures of the day. "The money market rotained the general features ennmerated so frequently since the general relaxa-tion in the rate on call. The stock houses were more extensively accommodated to-day at five per cent, and the Government dealers at par; but a great deal of business was done at six per cent, and a little at seven. Commercial paper was steady. Foreign exchange, though nominally quoted as on yesterd sy, was lower in actual transactions; the market being dull, buyers deferring their purchases until the Saturday steamer, the departure of to-morrow not being popular with remitters."

(Laughter.) Mr. Woodward declared, with some excitement, that the assertions of the gentleman from California were standerous. Mr. Paine resumed the floor and insisted on the The previous question. The previous question having been seconded, and the main question ordered. Mr. Holman moved to reconsider the vote ordering the main question, which motion gave him the right to the floor for an hour, which time he divided out to members on both hour, which time he divided out to members on both sides. An exciting discussion ensued, participated in by Messrs. Hoiman, Smith of Oregon, Beck, Voorhees, Sargent, Cox, Mayhew, Woodward, Butler of Massachusetts, Wood, and Eldridge. Mr. Hoiman reminded the House of the exclusion of Messrs. Young and Brown, members elect from Kentucky on the pretense of their having used expressions that were regarded as disloyal. Mr. Voorhees remarked that the only good effect of the objection to Porter was that it would involve the members on the opposite side in contradictions and necessitote a change of front. For his own part the case presented no difficulty to him. There was no reason against Porter being sworn in, as he held that the Bonse had no power to make the inquiry into his record if his constituents sent him here. Mr. Sargent recalled the fat the owned vote against 'the most infamous bill of a most infamous by the House for declaring in a speech that the Democratic party had, from the beginning of the Rebellion, thrown its in-No. 111 TENTH Street, below Chesnut.
