City Affairs.

—Susan Haines, who is charged with de-frauding the widow Barton and Miss Shivers, through false representations, has been identified, it is alleged, as having been accused of similar practices in this city about seven years ago, board having been then obtained at the Merchants' Hotel, and subsequently the lease of a furnished house.

Orders have been received at this station for the complete fitting out of the large steam tug Pilgrim, heretofore used for towing Government vessels, and for other Government duties, preparatory to her being ordered to Key West as a despatch boat. She is to be schooner-rigged, and is to be fitted with state-

-At a meeting of the Committee of Fire and Trusts of Councils, held last night, it was agreed to report an ordinance to Councils locating the Congress Engine as a steam fireengine company at Chesnut Hill. The plan for the reorganization of the Fire Department, adopted about two weeks ago by a committee of firemen, was laid before the committee. On motion it was agreed to hold a special meeting on next Tuesday night a week for its consideration. Three sub-committees of two each were appointed to inquire into the practicability of placing the out-door fre-alarm boxes in places where they cannot be reached by irresponsible parties.

-A further hearing was had yesterday, before Alderman Robert R. Smith, in the case of James A., alias Albert Cann, alias Harry Robinson, charged with bigamy. Testimony was adduced as to the marriage of the defendant in 1864 to Miss Emma E. Saul, subsequently to Miss Emma Darrah, and in January last to Miss Ida F. Ehrenzeller. Misses Darrah and Ehrenzeller were present and in order that the attendence of the lady he first married, who is sick, and another whom he is also alleged to have married, might be secured, the case was continued until Friday next.

-Charles Kelley and Patrick Ward, arrested in connection with the stabbing of Lewis S. Foster, bartender at No. 130 South Ninth street, were up for a further hearing before Alderman Kerr yesterday. Dr. Richardson testified that Foster is improving, but is not yet out of danger. Detective Miller stated that he saw Foster on Monday, and in a conversation with him was told that Ward was innocent, and that he did not wish him kept in prison any longer. Ward was thereupon discharged, and Kelley was committed for a week.

-An inquest was held yesterday in the case of Ann Anderson, aged seventy-six years, who was run over on Wednesday afternoon last, at Sixth and Lombard streets, by a car of the Lombard and South Streets Passenger Railway Company. A verdict of accidental death was rendered. Alexander Parkhill, the driver, who was in custody, was then discharged, the testimony showing that he did all within his power to prevent the accident, but without —At a meeting of the Alumni Association of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, held yesterday morning, the following officers were elected:—President, Thomas Wiegand; First Vice-President, Charles Eberle; Second Vice-President, Charles W. Hancock; Recording Secretary, Clements Parrish; Corresponding Secretary, A. J. Ditmann; Treasurer, E. C. Jones. The commencement exercises of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy took place last evening, according to the programme published in yesterday's Telegraph.

-At a meeting of the Board of Missions of the Lutheran Church, held yesterday, it was stated that arrangements had been made for the purchase of the Mission House, formerly the property of the Clinton Street Presbyterian Church, on Christian street, be-low Eleventh, for the use of the board in prosecuting the work of missions.

-At a meeting of the Board of School Controllers held yesterday, Mr. Hoffman, chairman of the Committee on Supplies, presented a report, recommending the following apportionment for books and stationery for the present year: -

Each	Total	Total Cost.
Boys' Grammar Schools $2.65	6,021	$15,955.65

City Councils appropriated $10,000 for the purchase of books and stationery. Balance left under the apportionment, $12,907.16. After deducting $2400 for the Central High and Normal Schools, there will remain $10,507.15, which will be held in reserve. The board reconsidered the resolution offered at the previous meeting, providing for a test case touching the rights of Controllers to fix the salaries of teachers independently of the action of Councils. In the discussion which arose on the subject, it was stated the counsel consulted by the committee had decided against the powers of the board in the premises. The test resolution was then voted down. A resolution was adopted giving permission to the female branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to distribute their publications among the children of the public schools, and to endeavor to interest the teachers and the children in the merciful object which the society was organized to carry out.

AT LAST.

The Murderer of Mary Mohrmann Found—The Finding of a True Bill by the Grand Jury. In our late editions of yesterday we made mention of the fact of the murderer of Mary Mohrmann having at length been detected and of the finding of a true bill against him by the Grand Jury. The facts of the case were then in our possession, but the lateness prevented their publication.

The horrible fate of little Mary Mohrmann, more than eighteen months ago, has been often adverted to in these columns. A new act in the terrible drama is now open. The mystery which surrounded her ravissement and foul murder is dissipated, and the frightful crime is fixed indubitably upon the barber, Hanlon, who now serves out a five years' sentence in the County Prison for an attempted outrage upon a little girl residing on Oxford street.

At an early hour on the morning of the 8th of September, 1868, some workmen passing over a lot bounded by Sixth, Fifth, and Dauphin streets and Susquehanna avenue, were horrified by the discovery of the body of the murdered child in a pool of water, not greater than three inches in depth. The last seen of Mary was on Sunday evening (September 6th,) about half-past seven o'clock. During her absence, her mother lamented her as one lost; far from her thoughts was the remotest idea that her child had been strangled. The remains presented a revolting spectacle, the face being discolored, the neck bearing yet the impress of the fingers that had tightly pressed it, while the underclothing was torn and bloody.

When the body was found, Dr. Shapleigh, the Coroner's physician, examined it. Rigor mortis had then set in, and this and other evidences, clear to the practised eye of a sur-geon, proved that life had been extinct about two days, and that the remains had been kept some time in a perfectly dry place, and then were deposited in the pool. Directly upon the receipt of the news of this discovery, De-tectives George E. Smith, Joshua Taggart, and Edward K. Tryon, three experienced officers, were detailed to discover who had committed this fiendish act.

Carefully and thoroughly they prosecuted the investigation. The popular impression in the neighborhood, even until the recent denouement, was that John Hanlon, a barber, living in the first house fronting on the east side of Fifth street, below Diamond, was the villain. He was taken in custody; and though the absence of any positive evidence required his discharge, those who knew him believed none the less that at his feet the horrible crime could be rightfully laid. His reputation was not stainless, and of sensualism he stood a contemptible and disgusting exponent.

After his release Hanlon was for a time lost sight of-to all but the detectives. Last fall a young fellow was arrested for attempting to ravish a little girl in the yard of the church at Eleventh and Oxford streets. To hush her cries for assistance he frightened her with torture, murder by the Indians, and, as a dernier resert, when she persisted in screaming, of cramming a pair of gloves in her mouth. A group of little boys, with an amount of cour age that would have spoken well for their elders, assaulted the brute, aided the little girl to escape, and followed her assailant until the officers took him in custody.

He was taken before Alderman Hood, to whom he gave the name of Charles Harris, was brought into the court, and during the trial evidences of such revolting conduct were produced as to secure his speedy conviction and sentence to prison for five years by his Honor Judge Peirce. His name appeared upon the prison register as Charles Harris, but Alderman Heins, who lived near the residence of the widow Mohrmann, and who has been active in endeavoring to ferret out the murderer, in passing by Harris' cell, discovered him to be none other than John Hanlon. When approached with queries relating to the disappearance of Mary he would answer, 'Well, I don't know anything about it. You say I killed her, but you can't prove it.' This discovery renewed the excitement first engendered, and confirmed the impression that he was the man. Still there was no tangible evidence of the fact. From that moment, until yesterday, Messrs. Taggart, Smith, and Tryon have been indefatigable in their labors, having the assistance of Alderman Heins, in gathering all the atoms of evidence bearing on the case, and have now testimony adequate enough to convict Hanlon for the murder of Mary Mohrmann. Yesterday the Grand Jury found a true bill against him for this heinous crime, and it is thought a speedy trial awaits him.

The Commonwealth will be able to prove that he took Mary on the night of the 6th of September, 1868, into his yard, through the side alley, between the hours of 7 and 8, having but shortly before issued from a beer saloon standing upon the corner. In the commission of his tiendish act, he strangled her, by circling her throat with his hands. That he pushed the body, yet warm, through the cellar-window opening into the alley, where it fell upon a pile of bricks. That after going out of the yard, and discovering whether the coast was clear, he went down into the cellar, and picking up the inanimate form, hid it under the cellar steps, and then came out with an easy nonchalance as though nothing unusual had occurred. It will be further shown that in the middle of the night he arose and went to the corner of Dauphin and Fifth streets, in the hope of discovering some place where he might place the body. He was frightened from his pose of placing the remains there that night by some of the neighbors, who will be called to testify. The day succeeding the murder (Monday) he left his home, remaining away all day, fearing, perhaps, that the crime should be discovered, and the presence of the murdered child concealed in his cellar fix the damning crime on him. Upon Monday evening he reappeared, and frequented his usual haunts to ward off suspicion. At midnight, again, he arose, put on slippers, stepped down softly into the cellar, gathered the body up in his arms, laid it against his breast as one would a sleeping child, passed out of the house to Diamond thence to Sixth, and thence to the open lot we have mentioned, where he threw his unwelcome and now hideous burthen into the pool. He was seen by a farmer coming out of the store at Sixth and Susquehanna avenue, to harness his horse preparatory to a day at market. As fate would have it, a woman, living at Fifth and Susquehanna avenue, was awakened at this time by a rattling shutter. In opening the window to stop it, she noticed Hanlon coming near the house by the path that leads diagonally across the lot and passes the pool. The night was not a dark one, and when Hanlon drew near the lady and discovered that her eyes were upon him, he dipped his head and hurried out of sight on a dog trot.

On several occasions he has committed indecent assaults upon little girls. About a year ago he followed a woman with a companion, who, though sixteen years of age, looked like a child, while walking out Germantown road, near the toll-gate. It was noticeable that he kept close upon the heels of the younger of the two. When the proper opportunity presented itself he picked up a stone and struck the woman three forcible blows on the back of the head, sending her headlong into the street. He then seized the girl, but she screamed murder, and her cries brought to the vicinity an elderly gentleman. who rescued her and caused Hanlon's arrest, The case was taken before a down-town Alderman. A compromise with the villain was effected. He was to have paid fifty dollars to the parents, but they never received it.

There is other and stronger evidence against him, which we are not at liberty to present to our readers at this time, and which the detectives have gathered only by the most assidu ous and persistent effort. Hanlon, in appearance, is about five feet seven inches in height. well-built, with a smooth face and light grey ish eyes. His is a peculiar relationship. He married a girl, when but thirteen years of age. This speaks for his penchant for female juvenility. His stepfather married his sister, and he mar ried his stepfather's daughter; so that his father-in-law is also his brother-in-law, and his wife is his sister-in-law.
