curtain, it will have accomplished a blessed result. There is a certain class of bumpkins who think these before-the-curtain quiddities are exceedingly smart. Poor things ! let us compassionate them !

A Reckless Romauce has occurred in Brooklyn, which is quite sufficiently an ism of New York to be rung in with it. A young lady moving in the highest circles there was engaged to be married to a young man. The circles were very high indeed-oh, very! So high as to form a sort of social amphitheatre quite out of the sight of ordinary eyes. The young man also moved in high circles-was a brigadier-general in the army. What could you want higher than that? He lavished all the expansive wealth of his soul's idolatry upon the young lady, and the young lady loved him with the passionate and yearning impulse of a too-confiding heart. In brief, they were betrothed. Thousands of dollars were spent by the young lady's father in fixing up rooms for the young couple, thousands of dollars worth of presents were made by the young lady's friends, hundreds of invitations were issued, and jewellers, stationers, and cabinetmakers were kept busy in imprinting monograms upon silver, cards, and farniture. Of a sudden it came to the young lady's knowledge that the man whom her relatives had endowed with a small fortune's worth of linen, bedding, upholstery, plate, furniture, and housekeeping articles generally, was a wicked creature, a sort of Baron von Bulow, Lord Alnsley, and Count Riviere rolled up into one. She immediately told her parents and friends to weep not for her, and as the most expeditious and lady-like way of settling the business broke off the engagement in a short and sharp interview, and surreptitiously left the city for a suburb, acquainting only her parents with her destination. Somehow or other Heliogabalus tracked her thither, and after having made vain efforts to enter the house, smashed the doors and even, it is said, fired through one of the windows.

The Theatres. Last night Mr. Clarke made his first appearance in this city after an absence of five years. The appearance was at Booth's Theatre, and the characters were "Toodles" and "Major de Boots," familiar names and individualizations, that were greeted with overwhelming applause. Mr. Clarke has been accustomed for many years to large and heartily-applausive audiences, but he was somewhat bewildered with the cordiality of last night. This was particularly evident in the speech he made at the conclusion of the first play, reverting briefly to his hard-earned success abroad (N. B. He did not say it was hardearned), and expressing the happiness he felt at being confronted with old faces. I cannot say that he is any funnier now than when I last saw him. What the orities mean by saying that his acting has gained in breadth and rotundity, 1 confess I don't know. That he pleases, after an interval of years, those whom he pleased then, is a very good criterion, however, that he has acquired greater felicity and not remained at a standstill.

Next Friday night Matilda Heron is to appear as "Medea" at the Bowery Theatre. The lady dees not commence an engagement there, as some of her enemies would be too glad to report, but simply acts for one night as commemorative both of her first appearance there eighteen wars ago and of a benefit to be ten-dered one of her old friends, who commenced the theatrical career with her-Gertrude Dawes.
