NEW-YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent NEW YORK, April 26, 1870.

Mysteriously Returned. Under the caption of "Mysteriously Heard From," I a day or two ago asked your attention to the kidnapping of a lad who had written a mysterious note to his parents from some unknown place, begging them to discover his whereabouts and come to his relief, and informing them that he had been overpowered and carried away while transacting business in the street. It was supposed that the boy had been kidnapped by one of the several bands of English gipsles that have lately arrived this country, and that they were holding him back in expectation of a considerable ransom being offered. That supposition was probably not incorrect. Very late on Sunday night the boy, whose name is Frederick Bennett, returned to his home, saying that he had come to his senses in one of the parks of the city-he thinks Washington Park. He was laboring under a good deal of confusion, and bore the appearange of one to whom a sleeping potion had been administered. The entire incident is an extremely marky and interesting

Mr. Fechter intended to have appeared last night, but was prevented by illness. With all the care that he took of himself, the capricious ups and downs of the American climate proved too much even for his good constitution, though it is not probable that his illness will be anything more than temporary.
The Lotes Club.

illustration of life in New York.

"The Lotos" is the name of a new social club that has been started in this city within the last few weeks, and which already owns nearly seventy members. All the small journalistic snarlers have been picking at it since it became organized, and I therefore take this opportunity of correcting any false impressions that have reached Philadelphia. It is meant to be composed of journalists, actors, authors, musicians, singers, artists, and men of business. The latter are the heavy background for the silver tracery furnished by the former. The youngest and freshest and lightest intellects of all those departments are eligible. The entrance fee is twenty dollars and the dues are five dollars per month. The club has already leased a magnificent residence at No. 2 Irving Place, adjoining the Academy of Music. It is to be elegantly furnished, and to be fi ted up with reading-rooms, billiard-rooms, a bar, a restaurant, and all the usual paraphernalia of club life. It is to hold receptions once month, and will ere long be the scene of a grand opening reception. of the smartest men and women in New York, in the various departments I have specified, already belong to it, and by the time the first reception is held it will probably contain one hundred members. Its design is to bring together the best kind of art and newspaper people and business people, and its character will be as far removed from Bohemianism as it is possible to conceive anything of being. Any one dropping in at No. 2 Irving Place of an evening, will be certain to hear

Newspaper Removal. Yesterday afternoon the Sunday Times removed from its old quarters at No. 162 Nassan street, which it has occupied for twenty-five years, to No. 12 Frankfort street, immediately adjoining French's Hotel. Its new offices compare very favorably with those of any Sunday newspaper in this city, and brilliant enterprises for the future are already pending there. Murder Detectives.

some good singing and to find clever men and women who can talk.

Under the reign of Superintendent Jourdan, in place of Kennedy, various reforms and innovations are promised among the detective police. Chief among these is the unearthing of murders, a class of detections which, under Kennedy's rule, was very little attended to. The reader will certainly remember at least two remarkable mysteries upon which not a ray of light has hitherto been thrown. One was the murder of Mr. Rogers before his own door, and the other the "death" of Mr. John Spicer under circumstances which threw the blame upon a quarter which the cowardly jury shrank from specifying. Jourdan has been in only a week: but even an older broom that does not sweep better than Kennedy did would be poor indeed.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

Madame Gazzaniga as "Lucrezia Borgia." The role of "Lucrezia Borgia," both in its dramatic and musical shape, has been given upon the stage of Philadelphia many times, but seldom or never with greater power than by the favorite artist who made her last appearance at the Academy of Music last evening. Madame Gazzaniga has been surpassed by many other singers in style, quality, and range of voice; but no singer who has appeared here since the building of the Academy of Music has succeeded to the same extent in the interpretation of the real meaning of tragic music, and of expressing all the emotional qualities of the roles that she has sustained. Madame Gazzaniga, if she were not a singer, would still be one of the finest tracic actresses of the time, and her personation of "Lucrezia Borgia" last evening, in Donizetti's musical adaptation of Victor Hugo's drama, proved that she has lost little or none of her old power, and that in retiring from the stage she will still leave upon the minds of her audiences the impression of a great artist. In all the highly wrought situations of the opera last night Madame Gazzaniga sang the passionate music with an expression that to any lover of art was worth something more than mere sweetness of voice and correctness of execution. All the high qualities of her style were cordially recognized by the large audience in attendance, and the applause was as hearty as the interesting occasion demanded.

trignoit sang the part of "Gennaro" as no other tenor can, and acted it considerably better than any one anticipated that he could. Susini, who is certainly the best basso now before the public, was heartily applauded when he made his appearance, and he gave a capital performance as "Alfonso." The other parts were respectably but not remarkably filled.

This was announced as Madame Gazzaniga's last appearance in public, but as there is always a reservation in favor of one time more in an artist's last appearance, we hope the suggestion that has been made for a farewell benefit will be carried out, and that this great actress-singer will be induced to give one of her favorite personations before saying a final farewell.

Every one of course has noticed how much Brignoll is growing in resemblance to a certain eminent-in fact the "eminent"-American tragedian. Now it spears to us that this remarkable likeness ought to be made use of for artistic purposes. What a magnificent thing it would be if Mr. J. Remington Fairlamb, or some other composer of eminence, would set Metamora to music, so that Brignoll could appear in warpaint and feathers in the role of "Big Injin." Imagine Brignoli singing, in the sweetest tones of his silvery tenor, such a passage as "You have sent for me and I have come: If you don't want me I'll go back to my wigwam."

The effect would be perfectly thrilling, and would create such a sensation as has no: been produced upon the American stage since Mr. Forrest first astonished and dismave I the public by his remarkable personation of the "Last of the Wampanoags."

THE PHILADLPHIA NATATORIUM AND PHYSICAL INSTI TUTE, situate on Broad street, below Walnut, will oper for the season on the 2d prexime, under the control of J. A. Payne & Brother. Since our City Fathers will not grant us the boon of free public baths, then must we accept the best that is offered us by private individuals, and we know of no place so well adapted for the purposes of public bathing as the establishment named above. The gentlemanly proprietors have had long experience and have completed many new and admirable arrangements that cannot fail to meet the approbation of their patrons. The basin is so arranged that a change of water is constantly taking place, and the whole volume displaced every few hours: an even, comfortable temperature is also maintained by the use of two large boilers stationed in the basement. Instructions will also be given to begin. ners, and the regulations of the bath will be in strict accordance with sanitary and hygienic laws. The terms are advertisement to be found elsewhere. Since cleanliness is said to be next to godliness, we would advise our readers to avail themselves of the benefits of the Natatorium.

GET THE GENUINE ARTICLE.—The great popularity of 'Wilbor's Compound of Cod Liver Oil and Lime" has induced some unprincipled persons to attempt to palm off a simple article of their own manufacture; but any person who is suffering from Coughs, Colds, or Consumption should be careful where they purchase this article. It requires no puffing; the results following its use are its best recommendations, and the proprietor has ample evidence on file of its extraordinary success in pulmonary complaints. Settlement of the Northwestern Trouble. OTTAWA, April 26 .- A despatch from Ottawa says that Judge Black and Father Richot had a private interview with the Premier. It is stated on trustworthy authority that considerable progress was made towards a thorough understanding and settlement of all matters connected with the Northwest. Nothing was determined upon between Sir John McDonald and Judge Black, but progress was made towards an adjustment of difficulties. In the meantime the arrangements for sending armed forces into the territory will continue. The original intention will be fully carried into effect. Scott was not present at this interview.

The interview will be continued to-morrow. The Fenian Scare. OTTAWA, April 26 .- In the House of Commons last night Mr. McKenzie said that last week the government had asked extraordinary power to provide against an anticipated attack, and he desired to know if the danger had been less than expected, and was the government prepared to repeal the act suspending the habeas corpus, as they should not needlessly alarm the country and disturb business, preventing emigration by exciting fears that the country was in danger of being disturbed. Sir George E. Cartler said that the government had certain information on which it acted. Although this was not the time to justify their actions, he might say they had not withdrawn all forces from the frontier.

The decided action taken had prevented an invasion, and they had that day received an intimation that all volunteers should not be withdrawn as there was still danger ahead. The Hon. Mr. Holton said he had opposed the proposition of the Government, and although his reason was not convinced, still he thought they had acted hastily and unadvisedly in leading people to believe that the country was in a chronic state of malaise. Sir George E. Cartier repeated that the Government was acting on definite information, and
