NEW-YORKISMS. From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, April 27, 1870. In the Confessional.

The reader of these pages will probably remember that Charles Dickens, in his novel of "David Copperfield," in sketching the character of a page whom that hero was weak enough to make part of his domestic establishment, takes occasion to remark that he was filled with sudden fits of confession, each one more free and open than the last, and in the course of which he would own up to everything that he had done wrong, or had intended to do. Some such principle as this seems to have guided the Mysterious Boy who a couple of weeks ago disappeared from the office of his employers in company of a check for $350, payable at sight. The said boy is Bennett by name, and last February reached the mature age of sixteen. He has already made three separate confessions. The first I have already acquainted you with. It is that he was accosted by a strange man, who mopped his face with a saturated sponge; that Bennett was conveyed in a state of unconsciousness to an obscure den; that he was drugged for ten consecutive days; and that at the end of that time he found himself penniless in Washington Park, whither he had been mysteriously conveyed. This sounded romantic enough for a dime novel, and was confession No. 1. No. 2 was to the effect that after drawing the check he bought himself some clothing, purchased a ticket for Boston, and went to that city and had a good but unholy time for several days, returning home last Saturday night. Confession No. 3 extends the trip not only as far east as Boston, but as far west as Chicago, and winds up with a Green-street bagnio previous to his return home. Number three is probably nearest the truth, but probably numbers four, five, and six will come nearer yet, until the bull's-eye shall be hit. One of the effects of Bennett's absence was to kill off a benevolent gentleman who had taken a fancy to him and adopted him. In addition to his other crouble this poor man grieved so hopelessly over the mysterious absence of his protege that it is probable his death was caused almost as much by a broken heart as anything else.

A One-String Velocipedestrian.

A Mr. August Slegrist, Jr., is performing a very remarkable feat at the Bowery. It [consists in riding a velocipede upon a single wire from the back of the stage across the parquette to the second tier of boxes, as well as returning. He performs this feat very neatly and fearlessly, and this is more than can be said of most of the recent entertainments in that line at this forlorn establishment.

Soupstone Langs.

In one of the suburbs of New York a man has just died who possessed the remarkable faculty of breathing through a pair of lungs which appeared to be fashioned out of a material resembling soapstone. Two or three days ago he interfered between two boys who were fighting. The father of one of them in return came out and struck him a severe blow on the head. The next day the man who was struck died. To determine the cause a post-mortem' examination was made, and it was discovered that through the process of disease his lungs had been entirely transformed into a substance exactly similar to sospstone. As a natural consequence the man who hit him on the head was exonerated, and the soapstone was brought in guilty.

WE call attention to the statement of the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company in another column, This institution commands itself most strongly to the could dence of all who have interest in the subject of Life Insurance. A glance at the report will show extreme careful ness and skill in the management of its affairs. The in-vestments are of the most substantial character, and give assurance to the policy holders that their money is placed almost beyond the chance of less, and the dividends compare most faverably with those of any other company. The law of Massachusetts which requires the companies chartered by that State to keep their policies in full force while the premiums paid for insurance are inexhausted. renders this company especially attractive to those who desire to avail themselves of the advantages of Life Inmrance, and who would not have their care rendered use less through the chance of sudden sickness or other inability to meet their premiums on the very day they fall

It is with great confidence we command this old, ther oughly established, excellently managed company to the favor of this community.

The Pennsylvania Agent, Mr. John Knox Marshall (offices Sixth and Walnut streets, Philadelphia), will be most happy to give detailed information to persons who will call upor him, and also to make liberal arrangements with solicitors and others who desire to engage in the good work of obtaining risks for the company which he represents.

OF THE INVALID .- The countless ways in which the Sea Moss Farine may be utilized in cookery, the immense number of dishes some plain and simple, others of the most delicate and delicious nature to which it imparts not only all that is desirable in quality, but a wonderful increase of quantity, are among its strongest recommend-ations. There is no kind of farinaceous preparations, no kind of soup or gravy in which it may not be used to advantage; and the blanc mange, puddings, custards, oreams, jellies, gruels, etc., made from it are not only unsurpassed, but, in our opinion, unequalled. Invalidat whese stomachaste so semitive as to reject all ordinary preparations for the sick reom, find no difficulty in repreparations for the max-room, and no dimotity in re-taining and digesting the light and neurishing food of which this article forms the basis. dence in one of the most respectable streets of the city, and inquired if the gentleman of the house was home. The door happened to be opened, as luck would have it, by the lady of the house, who appears to have had her own reasons for replying that he was not. In that particular house, however, the salls-a-manger, instead of being downstairs, happened to be upon the parlor floor, and the lady from Erin, rapidly slipping past the one who had opened the door, darted into the dining-room, where, to her gratification, but not to her surprise, the master of the house sat quietly sipping his tea, and eating his bread and butter and currant jelly. The lady of the house, leaving her station at the front door and following the strange visitor into the dining-room, of course a denouement was improvised. The gentleman dropped his currant-jelly sandwich and gazed at the visitor in monosyllabic horror. "Jane !" was all he was able to exclaim.

"What means this, Willyum ?" interrogated the lady of the house, laying upon his shoulder, with a grasp of iron, those same fingers which had cut and spread the bread-and-butter slices.

"It means, ma'am," said Jane, "that this man is my husband; that he married me six years age in Ould Oireland, and that for five years I've never set eyes upon him."

Before the sentence was completed "Willyum" had started up, seized his hat from the rack in the hall, and fled from the house, and the two wives were left alone. The precise terms in which the interview was conducted will of course never be known, but certain it is that she whom we have mentioned as the lady of the house followed "Willyum" that self-same night. and "Jane" remained in triumphant possession. Not only that; it has since been intimated that she intends selling everything of value that the place contains, and making off with the proceeds. The nine points of law represented in possession are in her favor. ALI BABA.
