

The Meeting of the Estranged. From William Morris' 'Rialto Parades.' With a great sigh, as one who throws A burden off, that sweet arose, And stood before him, trembling sore With love and joy; ah, and once more Fulfilled of love their kind eyes met, Although apart they stood as yet, Helpless with pain of ecstasy; Till from her lips a joyful cry, Ringing and sweet, burst forth, and he, Strong no more with love's misery, Faint, changed with this new joyful love, His wandering hands towards her did move 'E'en but a little way. But round His fluttering heart her arms she wound, And kissed his pale cheeks red again, And hung above his lovesome pain, Desiring him, as the Spring years For the young summer sun that burns His soft heart into fruitful death. His parched mouth felt her odorless breath, His weary, burning head did rest Upon the heaven of her sweet breast, His mazed ears heard her tender speech, His eyes, his silence did beseech For more and more and more of Love.

LITERATURE.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

A CRITICAL DICTIONARY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE, AND BRITISH AND AMERICAN AUTHORS, etc., by S. Austin Allibone. Vol. II. Published by J. B. Lippincott.

The publication of the first volume of Mr. Allibone's "Dictionary of Authors" created a decided sensation. The research that it displayed, and the thoroughness with which the grand plan of the work was carried out, were alike subjects for congratulation and surprise. It was recognized not only as a remarkable exhibition of bibliographical knowledge and well-directed industry, but as a perfectly unique contribution to the auxiliary literature of the day. The fault of the work was rather on the side of too great completeness than on that of falling short of what it promised, and some critics objected that a large amount of space was taken up with the names of writers of unimportant pamphlets and long-forgotten works who might as well have been allowed to rest unrecorded. Those who have frequent occasion to refer to such a compilation will be slow to admit that it can possibly be too thorough. In most encyclopedias it is just the out-of-the-way subjects neglected by the editors that are most frequently searched for, and it is because Mr. Allibone has explored with truly remarkable fidelity all the by-ways of literature that his Dictionary is so highly appreciated by those who are best able to understand its real value.

The time that has elapsed since the publication of the first volume made many fear that the elaborate character of the work would prevent its ever reaching a conclusion, and the issue of this second volume will therefore be a gratification to all who have taken an interest in the enterprise, and the conclusion will be hopefully and anxiously looked for. The second volume extends from title "Francis Kemmer" to title "W. I. L. Szogom," and from page 1006 to page 2326. It is of course impossible for us to give an adequate description of the contents of such a volume, and it is enough to say that it fully carries out all the promises of its predecessor, and it will be scarcely possible for the most industrious searcher for knowledge to find the omission of the name of any writer or publication in the English language up to the date of compilation. This volume is dedicated to the publisher, Joshua B. Lippincott, whose enterprise has enabled it to be given to the world.

From Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger we have received "Talks to my Patients," by Mrs. R. B. Gleason, M. D. This is a series of hints on medical subjects for women from a hydropathic point of view. Mrs. Gleason is the head of the Elmira Water Cure Establishment, and in this work she has endeavored to combine the substance of her "Parlor Talks" to her patients. A number of valuable hints are given, and the work can scarcely fail to be of use if its ideas are carried out according to the suggestions of the author.

The same house sends us "The Poetical Works of David Bates," edited by his son, Stockton Bates. The author of these poems died in January last, and the publication of a complete edition of his writings in verse, under the editorship of his son, is an act of filial piety that to a great extent disarms criticism. Mr. Bates was a man of poetical feelings rather than a poet; and although there are many graceful verses in this volume, there are few that have the genuine ring of poetry to them. Several, however, have gained considerable popularity on both sides of the Atlantic, and they are all of a character to please that large class of readers who delight in the elegant commonplaces of what is popularly known as magazine poetry. We candidly think that it would have been better to have left these verses remain in the corners of the newspapers and in the magazines to which they were originally contributed, without dragging them before a cold and critical world. But it is possible that the poems may find admirers, for the tastes of readers of poetry are exceedingly various, and much worse performances than these have passed through edition after edition. The book is handsomely printed on toned paper, and is bound in neat and attractive style.

From Turner & Co. we have received "In Spain and a Visit to Portugal," by Hans Christian Andersen. Published by Hurd & Houghton. This is the fourth volume of the uniform edition of Andersen's works now in course of publication by Hurd & Houghton, by a special arrangement with the author. After his short stories for children Hans Christian Andersen has written nothing more delightful than his records of travel. His "Improvisators" is one of the most exquisite descriptions of Italy ever given, and in this book he relates his impressions of Spain and Portugal with all the enthusiasm of a poet and all the keenness of vision that characterizes a genuine artist. No one familiar with the author's style will need any special recommendation for such a work as this, and we can bestow upon it no higher praise than to say that it is very delightful reading.

The same house sends us "Be the Lugegog Boy; or, Among the Wharves," by Horatio Alger, Jr., the fifth volume of "The Ragged Dick" series, and "Marion Berkeley," by Laura Caxton, a pleasantly-written story for girls, both of which are from the press of Loring.

—From J. B. Lippincott & Co. we have received the May numbers of Good Words, Good Words for the Young, and The Sunday Magazine. These publications are up to their usual high standard of excellence. They are illustrated by some of the best English artists of the day, and their literary matter is from the pens of eminent and popular writers.

—The Philadelphia Photographer for May gives as its specimen a remarkably fine picture by Loeschler & Pesach, of Berlin, Prussia, made by their improved skylight. This number has several interesting and important articles on a variety of subjects connected with the photographic art.

—Lecture Hours for May has an interesting series of articles. —The Industrial Protector, edited by Wm. Y. Leader, No. 138 South Third street has reached its third number, and appears to be on the high road of success. It is a large and handsome quarto, printed on good paper, and its columns present a sufficient variety to suit all tastes.

—The Grand Army Journal is an attractive sheet, the publication of which has just been commenced at Washington, D. C., under the auspices of the Grand Army of the Republic. It is designed to advocate the claims of our soldiers and sailors, and to supply the veterans of the late war with a paper that will be at once attractive in itself and that will afford a means for interchange of ideas. The first number promises well, and we wish the enterprise success. Allen Page, No. 423 Walnut street, is the agent for this city.
