SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1870.

THE CIVIL SERVICE BILL. THE Civil Service bill, which Mr. Jenckes has labored so long and so industriously to perfect, has met with a cold reception in the House of Representatives. After being subjected to a series of attacks from its enemies, and after a number of amendments had been offered, it was unanimously recommitted, on motion of its author, so that further efforts might be made to render it acceptable. For practical governmental purposes, the present system of selecting and dismissing employes is about the worst that human ingenuity could devise. It facilitates the appointment of hosts of incompetent and distonest men, and the discharge of thousands of useful and conscientious officers. These evils would be obviated to a large extent by the passage of the Civil Service bill, but it is questionable, on the other hand, whether it would not have a tendency to create a permanent office-holding class. In spite of the defects of the present system, many people would be loth to surrender the free-and-easy opportunities it affords to turn any existing incumbent out of office, and to put anybody who can muster, by hook or crook, a strong array of influence, into a position which he is totally disqualified to fill. One of the greatest distinctions between a monarchy and a republic, after all, arises from the facilities afforded in the former to limited aristocratic classes to monopolize official appointments, and the free manuer in which all offices, from the highest to the lowest, are thrown open in the latter, alike to the incompetent and the competent, the poor and the rich, the powerful and the weak. When we begin to prescribe a fixed standard of qualifications, and to create boards of examiners, it is difficult to tell where to stop, for if clerks and collectors are to be catechised in regard to their characters and acquirements, why should Presidential candidates and Congressmen be suffered to escape similar investigations? The Chinese have carried the principle of competitive examinations to a ridiculous excess, making literary merit and scholastic attainments the only sure aids to ambition, and yet it is doubtful whether, on the whole, they are as well served officially as America. Our hap-hazard system gives office to thousands of undeserving men, but it facilitates the entrance into official life of thousands of other men remarkably well adapted to the public service, whose merits would never gain recognition under a restrictive and competitive system, and it secures a perpetual infusion of active new blood in every department of the Government, thus preventing the old fogyism and stagnation that frequently prevail in the official circles of other countries. When to these objections to a radical change are added those arising from the aversion of politicians to a surrender of patronage, we do not wonder at the hostility displayed to the Civil Service bill. Before it can become a law it must evidently be modified so as to be nearly destitute of meaning and efficacy, and the best that can be hoped now is that a slight dishonest office-hunters. THE NEW STATE OF DELAWARE. DELAWARE is too near a neighbor for us not to take a friendly interest in her affairs, and it is with regret that we find a large portion of her population still indisposed to heed the admonitions and suggestions of reforms that we have advanced from time to time for her benefit. Delaware still clings to the whippingpost and pillory with fondest affection; she still sends Saulsbury to the Senate, and does a variety of other very shocking things that we of Pennsylvania are compelled to view with displeasure. Delaware, however, takes after little men, bantams, and terriers in being exceedingly self-assertive, and the more she is advised for her own good, the more she declares that she will do as she pleases, so that really there seems to be no hope for her unless her boundaries are enlarged. Independently of the fact that it is a great wrong to the rest of the Union that a few square miles of not very thickly populated territory like Delaware should have two Senators-and such Senators as Bayard and Saulsbury-her limited area is a disadvantage in a great many respects, and in none more so than in the fact that it has a tendency to make her people conservative and opposed to all reforms. The peculiar geographical situation of Delaware has a good deal to do with this, but her limited area has perhaps more, and it is for the interest not only of the people immediately concerned. but for that of the whole country, that such seven-by-nine States as Delaware and Rhode Island should be abolished.

check may be imposed on incompetent and

Not for a moment must it be supposed that we propose to tow Delaware out beyond the Capes and sink her, whipping-post, pillory, and all, beneath the blue waves of the At-On the contrary, we are in lantic. favor of adding to the dignity and importance of Delaware by annexing to her all the adjacent territory east of the Chesapeake Bay. The peninsula which includes Delaware and the Eastern Shores of Virginia and Maryland would make a very respectable State, whereas it is now looked upon by the world outside very much as a sort of noman's land that is not of much account any. how. The Eastern Shores of Maryland and Virginia have undoubtedly suffered from being detached to such an extent from the States to which they belong, and the inhabitants have never wielded that influence, either political or social, that properly belongs to them, and little Delaware, locked in by these outlying provinces, at times runs a fair chance of being forgotten altogether.

By the creation of a new State-to be called Delaware, of course-out of the peninsula, the people would be excited into something like activity, the value of property would be increased, railroads would be built, and improvements innumerable would be made that would in a few years transform what is now one of the fag-ends of creation into a garden spot. The natural advantages of the peninsula are many, and it is only because it has been so unluckily divided politically that it has remained for so long a time in the background. The interests of the three sections are identical, and they are to a great extent diverse from those of the States on the other side of the Chesapeake Bay, but these interests can never be properly maintained so long as the present boundary lines continue. The idea of erecting the peninsula into a separate State has been talked about in a sleepy sort of a way by the people of the region for some time past; but, as in all detached neighborhoods, the local pride is great, and this, with the fine flavor of antiquity that prevails on the Eastern Shore and in Delaware, has had its influence in preventing any steps being taken to accomplish what most persons consider a very desirable object. We scarcely hope for any move in the desired direction by the peninsularians themselves, but as we take a sincere interest in their welfare, we are willing to advocate their cause, and startthe ball for them; so we fling our banner to the breeze and cry three cheers for the new State of Delaware.

A DESPATCH from Washington says that suits are about to be brought against ex-collectors of internal revenue whose accounts still stand open. These deficiencies amounted on the 15th of December, 1868, to more than ten millions of dollars, which sum, it is supposed, has been materially increased since. It is high time that these accounts were adjusted, as the burdens imposed upon taxpayers to meet the necessary expenses of the Government are quite sufficient without the additional contributions involved in the continuation of large balances in the hands of ex-collectors.
