The wounds of Hughes were examined by Dr. Smith, and one is believed to have penetrated the left lung. Hughes identified one John Ford as the one who commenced the disturbance, but could not say that he was the one who stabbed him. Ford, who lives at No. 1442 Anthony street, was locked up. THE HAIL STORM.

Great Damage Inflicted Throughout the City-Churches, School-Houses, Het-Houses, Factories, and Dwellings Suffer. The following are the more important incidents happening during the storm: -Just as the storm commenced a funeral procession was about starting from a house in Seventeenth street, below Pine. About twenty carriages, containing relatives and friends of the family, were forming, when the horses became unmanageable in consequence of the pelting of the hall, and started at a furious rate up Seventeenth street. The driver of the hearse containing the corpse, a child, in attempting to stop the horses ran the hearse against a tree-box, and before he could get away, two of the carriages ran into the hearse, breaking the wheels of the hearse and damaging the sides, but the fastening in the bottom of the vehicle prevented any damage to the coffin. The driver of one of the carriages broken by the collision with the hearse was thrown violently to the ground, receiving such dangerous wounds in his head and back that it was thought best to remove him to the Hospital, where he new remains in a critical condi-His name is Patrick Dugan, and resides in Quarry street. The storm was very severe in the north-western as well as in other parts of the city. A large number of lights in the school-houses on Coates street, above Twelfth, and on Melon street, above Eleventh, were broken. dwelling-houses in this entire neighborhood suffered severely, some of the buildings having as high as fifty panes of glass broken. Over lights were broken at Handel and Havdn Hall, and a large number in Washington Hall,

Spring Garden street. St. Mark's Lutheran Church and the Bishop's Free Church, on Spring Garden street, above Thirteenth, both suffered severely, the requiring an expenditure of $1000 at least to repair the damages. St. Malachi's Catholic Church, on Eleventh street, above Master, had all the front windows broken. The Universalist Church, on Eighth street, above Noble, and the Tenth Presbyterian Church, at Twefth and Walnut streets, were also badly damaged. Along North Eighth street we noticed a large number of windows broken: Spring Garden Academy, Eighth and Buttonwood streets; Universalist Church, above Nobie street; at Nos. 487, 489, 411, and 441, a number of large-sized glass broken; northeast corner of Eighth and Callowhill streets, nearly fifty panes broken; at Nos. 230 and 241 large glass broken; the front windows of Trinity M. E. Church badly damaged; Track's photograph gallery, No. 159 North Eighth street, was damaged to the extent of street, was damaged to the extent of several hundred dollars, by the breaking of sky windows; over fifty lights broken in stores from Nos. 101 to 117, and at No. 63 North Eighth street, Haldt, photographer, had sixty lights broken; and at No. 13, Yeigel's store, nearly all were broken. Morat's gallery, southwest corner Eighth and Market streets, also suffered severely in the loss of window and skylight, the latter being entirely destroyed and the room damaged by water. The injury to the windows of stores along Market street was not so great as one would have imagined. At Nos. 722, 724, and 720 a number of lights were broken, and only thirty were broken in the large store of Wanamaker &

Brown, Sixth and Market streets.

The Tenth Presbyterian Church, at Twelfth and Walnut, suffered severely in broken windows, nearly every pane of glass exposed having been broken.

In the southern portion of the city the storm was very violent, especially in the First and Second Very many of the stained glass windows in the Tenth and Dickerson street fronts of the Church of the Annunciation, the Scott Methodist Episcopal Church on Eighth street, below Dickerson, the Calvary Baptist Church on Fifth street, below Carpenter, and in the Mariners' Baptist Bethel on Front street, below Christian, were broken.

At the Naval Asylum several hundred lights were demolished. In the front windows of the Second District Police Station (old Southwark Hall), eighty-nine panes of glass were shattered. The splendid hot-house of Mr. Lippincott, at Broad and Walnut streets, was completely riddled, and the plants much damaged.

In the front windows of the Shiffler Hose house, a new building on Moyamensing avenue, below Dickerson street, there were but seven whole panes of glass when the storm subsided. Very considerable damage was done to the hot-houses of the Widow Bisset, florist, on Tasker street, between Moyamensing avenue and Fourth street. All over the city skylights were broken, causing damage to the goods of storekeepers in the business quarters. The services of the Insurance Patrol was called into requisition in some instances, and their waterproof coverings were of great benefit in preventing damage.

The drivers on street cars had great difficulty in managing the horses during the violence of the storm, and the application of both brakes was necessary to prevent spirited animals from running away. Two handsome horses attached to a light wagon took fright in the upper part of the city and dashed off at full speed. The wagon was overturned, the driver thrown out. and the animals kept on. The owner had not been able to hear anything of them up to last

At St. Mark's Church some two hundred panes of glass were broken, including some one hundred and fifty of the stained panes constituting the "Four Apostles" window, which will take several hundred dollars to replace.

On Chesnut street the damage was not very extensive below Sixth street, but beyond that point some of the buildings suffered severely.

At the Continental Hotel about sixty of the large lights on Chesnut street were broken, and two hundred and fifty in other portions of the building. About three hundred were broken out of the windows of the Girard House.

The Mercantile Library, on Tenth street, above Chesnut, suffered severely, one hundred and twenty lights in the side windows having been broken, and about the same number of the side lights on the roof and the ground glass inside. Several hundred dollars will be required Mucl of the glass in the towers of St.

Stephen's Church was broken.

The Bingham House, at Eleventh and Market streets, had over 343 lights broken (250 of which were large lights), and the windows on Eleventh as well as on Market street presented a most dilapidated appearance.

The damage was also serious along Broad street—the windows of warehouses, churches, and dwellings being much broken. The hand-some circular window of stained glass in the chapel of the Arch Street Methodist Episcopal Church were completely riddled; while nearly every pane of glass was broken from tower and Arch, and also from the large windows on the broken, entailing a loss of near $1000, without counting damage to the rare and costly plants. From $1200 to $1500 will be required to repair the loss sustained by the breaking of glass in Mr. Dryburgh's hot-house in Cherry street, below Eighteenth.

Nearly all the glass in the windows of the Southwestern Presbyterian Church, Twentieth and Fitzwater streets, are broken. The beautiful stained glass in the windows of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Nineteenth and Walnut streets, is much shattered. The stained glass windows in the Church of the Covenant, on Filbert street, near Eighteenth, are damaged beyond repair.

At the Fourth Reformed Presbyterian Church, Eighteenth and Filbert streets, the communion service had just commenced when the storm broke over the city. Many of the lights in the windows were broken.

The hot-house of Rodney King, at Nineteenth and Race streets, was badly damaged. Also the one belonging to James Pollock, Fifteenth street, below Walnut.

A large number of lights were broken in the new Colonnade Hotel, Chesnut street, above Fifteenth, and considerable damage done to private dwellings in the immediate vicinity. In most of the churches, Sunday School services had commenced, and there was much excitement among the children, caused by the breaking of glass and the loud noise made by the falling hail.

A large number of lights were also broken at the Episcopal Academy, on Locust street, below Broad. At Horticultural Hall 195 lights were broken, but the Academy of Music, adjoining, escaped with but trifling loss.

The large rose window in the new Baptist Church, at Broad and Spruce streets, was completely riddled, also two smaller ones. large window in the north end, which cost about $9000, was damaged, but it is thought it can be repaired.

Dr. Wiley's Church, Broad, below Spruce was also damaged to some extent, the stained glass windows being broken badly. The oriel window of the beautiful church at Broad and Green streets was also riddled. The large hot houses of Mr. Mackenzie, at Broad street and Columbia avenue, were seriously damaged, not a pane of glass remaining. Calvary Presbyterian Church, Locust street, above Fifteenth, was damaged badly, the stained glass windows being ruined. It will cost at least $1000 to repair the loss. The stained glass windows in the church at Seventeenth and Spruce streets, also in St. Mark's, Locust street, above Sixteenth, were badly riddled with the At Third and Pine the storm was not so severe, the windows of St. Peter's being little damaged. Most of the churches in the city, as well as school-houses and other public buildings, not protected by shutters, are more or less

Of the 8000 public lamps, at least half were broken, and probably more, for in the built-up portions of the city nine out of every ten of those we examined on the east and south sides of the streets had damaged toplights. In some places every lamp was broken, unless sheltered by an awning, a tree, or some other protection. The green houses at Eighteenth and Master streets, belonging to Mr. Graham, were com-pletely riddled, scarcely a single pane of glass remaining. Sherwood's green-house, on Seventh street, below Chesnut, was also badly damaged.

The fine show-room of Wheeler & Wilson, at 914 Chesnut street, was damaged to the extent of from $1500 to $2000, by the hall and water which poured in from the broken sky-light above. The hall had to be shovelled from the floor. The upper rooms of the building, occupied by Wenderoth, Taylor & Brown, were also damaged by the riddling of the skylight. A large number of panes of glass were broken at Powers & Weightman's works, Ninth and freight depot, Ninth and Green. A number of persons had their hands and arms bruised while attempting to close their shutters, and in some houses there was quite a panic among the inmates. A number of the windows in the Moravian church at Franklin and Thompson streets were broken. The road from the Water Works to the Park was covered with water in consequence of the stoppage of the drains. At the Park no particu-lar damage was done except to young trees, shrubbery, and plants. The crops of early spring vegetables in the neighborhood of the city are fearfully damaged, the tomato plants, pea vines, beans, cucumber vines, and indeed all crops suffering very greatly. As far as we have heard, but little damage was done in Camden, and the storm does not seem to have been very severe in West Philadelphia.

Brown streets. Also at the new Germantown

SIMON CAMERON.

What He Pretends to Remember, and What Others Remember of Him.

Correspondence of the N. Y. World.

WASHINGTON, May 5 .- That distinguished and virtuous patriot, Simon Cameron, who has done so much to elevate the political morals of the country, has what may be called a prodigious memory. That is to say, he remembers everything that is convenient, and forgets everything that is embarrassing. The public appreciation of Simon and the knowledge of those who have been nearest in his intimacy have another word than memory for this remarkable quality-they rather ascribe it to an inventive genius, which has stood him many a good turn.

Now, Simon thought that the time had come for demonstrating that a prophet might have honor in his own country. So when Revels ap-peared on the scene, and Sumner had discharged his usual quantity of "humanity," Cameron thought there was an opening for Pennsylvania to strike in. So therefore he remembered a conversation with Jefferson Davis ten years ago, wherein he predicted that a "colored gemman" would occupy his seat in the Senate, as a result

Well, after a reasonable time, Mr. Davis quietly suggested that no such conversation had ever taken place, and consequently the prophet had not won his spurs. Thereupon, the wily Simon falls back upon his reconciled brother Forney, whom he denounced not long ago in the Senate, and who, considering the Forrest letter, ought not to be a man after his own heart, and gets up in the Chronicle a breakfast for himself at "Jeff's" house only "two weeks" before the separation, and there lays the scene of his prophecy of the second edition. Like some swift witnesses, Simon has proved rather too much for his memory. Mr. Davis was a prisoner to a dark room for a long time before leaving Washington "to go South." Strange as it may appear, in face of the existing prejudice, he was for compromise and settlement up to the last moment, and in favor of the Crittenden resolutions for a basis. It was with great reluctance he took the ground of the real revolutionary leaders, though necessarily sympathizing with their alleged grievances.

But, according to the assertions of the radical press, secession had been long planned, and culminated during the winter preceding Mr. Lincoln's inauguration, with Jefferson Davis as the master spirit. Now, if this be true at all, in what attitude does it place the virtuous, patriotic, and disinterested Simon Cameron, who, according to the last phase of his wonderful men.ory, was "breakfasting" with "Jeff Davis" only "two weeks" before the Rebellion began? This time he shifts the responsibility on Mrs. Davis, who, of course, cannot speak. But everybody knows she was much more advanced on the issue than her husband was, and that no such relations ever existed as Simon suddenly remembers. They were on terms of kindness, as Mr. Davis says, in the Senate. because Cameron always professed great admiration for him, and was profuse in his expres sions of regard down to the last. The plain truth is. Simon has drawn upon his imagination for his facts, which, though not very vivid, he contrives to make useful at times.

By the way, Cameron has never explained how it came to pass that he, as Secretary of War, accepted the resignation of Lee, Johnston, Beauregard, and the whole catalogue of distinguished traitors" who made war against the "national life" for four years, and imposed upon the country a burthen of some four thousand millions, of which, however, Cameron and his family and his friends have no reason to complain. He was the prophet who foresaw all about the Rebellion, who predicted the coming of Revels, and who imported Belgian guns, through the self-sacrificing Sanford, more dangerous to Union men than to Rebels.

How did he, "the Secretary," come to send Lee, and Johnston, and a host of West Pointers to the South, thus furnishing generals for their army, brains for the Rebellion, and enemies to the republic? Why did he not arrest them on the spot as "traitors" then? Why not "nip" the revolution in the bud? If there be one man in this broad Union more responsible for the beginning, progress, and continuance of the Rebellion, for the lives lost, the blood shed, and the treasure squandered, it is Simon Cameron, of Pennsylvania, the first Secretary of War to Mr. Lincoln. He let the chiefs go, knowing their purpose, and therefore he might in an ordinary criminal proceeding be indicted as an accessory before the fact. Without these chiefs there would have been no real rebellion on any extended scale. The South owes its leaders to Mr. Cameron, and the North may allow him the credit of its causes of mourning and debt.

Perhaps Mr. Cameron's memory, singular as it is, might be refreshed by some other facts. He knows, for the records prove it, that a large contract for supplying our troops in New Mexico and on the frontier had been made by Floyd before he came into office, with Jackman, Magraw, and others. The Rebellion upset all these arrangements, and Scott ordered the troops in New Mexico (I think) to come here forthwith. That order, if carried out, would have ruined the contractors. They came to Washington. They saw Cameron. "Don" was considered. They saw Cameron. "Don" was considered. The order was revoked. The troops did not come, and the battle of Bull Run was lost, for if these 2500 regulars had been there nobody doubts that the result would have been changed. There is one individual who rode in a fine carriage, drawn by splendid horses, from New who may remember how all that happened, and if he does not there are others still living who do.

Simon is especially strong on the black man since Revels is supposed to be a power. But his zeal is not altogether of yesterday. Let us be just. When Mr. Lincoln had decided to dismiss Cameron from his Cabinet, owing to the virtuous manner in which contracts were made, he had also prepared a passage in his message recommending the employment of black troops. About that time the Secretary of War found his office very hot. The Tribune and all the big guns poured in very big shot and quite too much grape. They cried out, like the Jews of old "Crucify him!" Congress was about coming together, and after the investigations which had been already ordered it was evident that Simon must go to the wall. In this ex-tremity he made a flank movement on Lin-coln; incorporated the President's intended recommendation about the black troops in his own report; let the report get out in advance of the message, by accident, of course, and thus captured the citadel of Radicalism. Greeley had nothing but hoseunahs to sing. The start-ling jobs: the Pennsylvania horse contracts: Den's manipulation; Belgian guns; Tremont's speculation, and the whole catalogue of plunder, such as the history of the world had never recorded before, were all forgotten in the joy over Cameron's conversion. Everything was forgot-

They whitewashed him so that he scarcely knew hin self, and posted him off to Russia, the exile of dilapidated politicians, as a compliment to the Czar's friendship. En route he stopped in Paris, and, loitering along the Boulevards, discovered Slideli standing at a window. He rushed up, seized him by the hand, and gushed into Pennsylvania authoricans proposed and presserved in the pennsylvania authoricans and pushed into Pennsylvania authoricans proposed in the pennsylvania authorica into Pennsylvania enthusiasm over his old friend before Slidell had time to recover equa nimity and to turn coldly from this "audaciou intrusion," as he called it. Of course Simon" memory will be defective in this little souvening It is only fresh where Revels is concerned, who it is only just to say, is the better man of the
