It is also probable that they will hold their ses-sions in the room of the college of physicians, on the northeast corner of Thirteenth and Locust streets.

—In the House yesterday, after the close of our report, the Diplomatic Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole, and the amendment for a Minister Resident at Rome was rejected. Without disposing of the bill the committee rose, and Mr. Eldridge's motion to reconsider the vote admitting Mr. Newsham to a seat from Louisiana was tabled. Mr. Newsbam was then sworn in. Mr. Cox offered a resolution embodying a system of revenue, and a commission to examine the question of taxation, which was referred. Several other bills were introduced, among them one taxing dogs. Adjourned.

THE ASSEMBLY.

Proceedings of Yesterday Afternoon's Session. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church reconvened at 3½ o'clock yesterday afternoon. After some unimportant changes in the boundaries of the Synods of Albany, Utica, Geneva, and Genesee, they were ratified. The Synod of Philadelphia was then taken

Alfred Hand, Esq., of Scranton, moved that the proposed Synod of Scranton be added to that of Philadelphia, with the exception of the counties of McKean, Potter, and Tioga, which be added to the Synod of Harrisburg. After speeches in the affirmative by Rev. Henry H. Welles, of Kingston, Pa., and Rev. S. H. Moon, of Presbytery of Montrose, it was agreed to. All of the Pennsylvania synods were somewhat changed, and, as

finally adopted, are constituted as follows:-Synod of Philadelphia, to comprise the counties of Philadelphia, Bucks, Northampton, Montgomery, Delaware, Chester, Lancaster, York, Lebanon, Berks, Bradford, Susquehanna, Wayne, Pike, Monroe, Lehigh, Carbon, Schuylkill, Luzerne, Wyoming, and Sullivan, and the Presbytery of Western

The Synod of Harrisburg to comprise the counties of McKean, Potter, and Tioga, and the remainder of the State of Pennyslvania east of the east line of Elk county and east of the west line of Clearfield, Blair, and Bedford counties.

The Synod of Pittsburg, to comprise the counties of Cambria, Somerset, Westmore-land, Greene, Fayette, Washington, so much of Indiana county as lies south of Black Lick Creek, and so much of Alleghany county east of the Alleghany river and south of the Ohio.

The Synods of New Jersey and Baltimore were agreed to as published by us on Sa-

Rev. William Adams, D. D., of New York, moved that not only Wednesday evening but Thursday evening also be set apart for the reception of delegates from fereign churches, which was agreed to.

from the Committee on Correspondence, re-ported the presence of Dr. David Cole as delegate from the Reformed Church, and his name was ordered to be placed on the roll. After continuing for some time the discussion on the arrangement of synodical bounda-ries in the Western States, the Assembly ad-journed with a prayer by Hon. James Pol-place on Saturday and a grand social rennion be given at the Academy of Music on Friday evening, to which the Assembly and those who had official business with it were invited. An invitation was also extended to the Assembly to visit Atlantic City by the Directors of the Camden and Atlantic Railroad. Governor Pollock also extended an invitation to the members to visit the United States

FOREIGN ART ITEMS. The Paris correspondent of the London Athenaum thus describes one of the principal sensations of the salon of 1870;-It is called Salome, the work of M. A. Regnault, and represents the damsel resting on a seat, her feet on a leopard's hide, and holding on her knees the gold charger and redsheathed knife of John the Baptist's death. She is panting, as if after the fatal dance; her very feet are hardly yet still, the heels seem to tap each other and the toes to twitch; her youthful bosom, hardly hidden by silk of rosy and golden colors, heaves; the vast tangles of her hair of deepest black fall over her brows, which shadow eyes unchaste, cruel and lighted with a wicked triumph, to her shoulders, where they meet the as yet imperfect luxury of her bust and its delicate skin. Her lips are just parted by the smile, and show the teeth within. Her body is covered by the rosy and gold-hued silks before named; her tunic, gorgeously painted and in itself gorgeous, is of the thinnest tissue of cloth of gold, itself a mystery of sheeny wealth, which hardly hides the limbs which she designs to show. She is otherwise bejewelled and bedizened in barbaric magnificence; sits on a stool of subtlest inlays, and before a curtain of glowing yellow. As to the representation of the subject, of course it may be objected that this is rather the personification of a French opera dancer's wildest dream of a theatrical triumph than a picture of the fair daughter of Herodias as she sat before Herod and her mother. This objection would be se far just that this "Sa-lome" looks too much hardened in wicked desires, if not wicked ways, too much like many men's ideal of a French opera dancer, to agree with our notions of the maiden's life; also that it is "French" to the core, that is, not far removed from operatic: yet this criticism is not wholly fair, because the work thoroughly and entirely fulfils its purpose of presenting a new subject to French eyes, and the result is fascinating after one has got over the startling effect of the yellow back-ground, mastered the cruel insolence of the eyes, so ill suited to the damsel of our thoughts-eyes which stare and defy while they exult-and has got over the amazing splendors of her costume, which are rather meretricious than superb and princely. These things mastered—no easy task—we begin to admire the power which produced the face, the skill which dealt with the rose and ivory of the flesh, especially in the feet, and the fine points of vivid and original color which sppear in this figure; the very dexterity which so tricked it in tissue, and the audacity which dealt with the background. are certain of applause. Of course, after all this is said, the very powers which are thus triumphantly displayed in all their luxury and fervency are those which herald as well as insure the corruption and decline of severe

The same critic notices as follows the allegorical picture by Yvon, painted for Mr. A. T. Stewart, of New York:-

Man is mortal, and critics are but men; so we admit without shame, nay, with satisfaction, that there is Art and an irresistible charm in Mr. Regnault's picture, which are wanting in that tremendous historical allegory which no less famous a painter than M. Adolphe Yvon, Delaroche's own pupil, has condescended to produce for M. Stewart, of New York—and we trust, at an enormous price, because the agonies of its bringing forth deserve an immense return. It is de signed to glorify the Northern States of the Union, and does so fulsomely. It represents a gigantic figure of the American republic giving a hand to "la Sagesse;" archangels are expelling evil passions, sanguinary traces on the earth represent the past; black, white, and even red men are jubilant; hordes of European emigrants arrive and find Virtue triumphant; the American rivers are personified, together with Peace, Labor, the statue of Washington, and proclamations of the glories of the United States are going forth to the four corners of the world. Bad and stupid as these things are, we recognize and, with a laugh, endure them; but what on earth can be meant by the grim figure which, like Nemesis, rises from the grave on our left? This portentous production would not call for notice, if the fame of M. Yvon were not concerned and its vast dimensions and prominent position did not challenge the eyes. Drawn with a cold academic correctness, painted heartlessly, fri-gidly inspired, conventional, boastful, and yet weak in sentiment, here allegory culminates: would it were the last of 4ts kind! There is more of art, more of the human heart, more truth in the tritest picture here of an Italian organ-grinder than in this enormous daub by one of the most eminent

A correspondent writes as follows to the London Athenaum with regard to another "Reading Magdalen" attributed to Corregigee: This picture is at Heidelberg, and said to have been brought from Italy by Duke Carl Engen von Wurtemberg, is in excellent preservation, on canvas; size, 15 by 9½ inches.

The Magdalen is in a wood, lying on the mossy ground, supporting her head on the right arm, and holding with the left an open book, bending over it as though absorbed.

The dark-blue drapery falling back from the head is arranged to leave the arms, breast, and feet uncovered. An expression of life in quiet repose is over the whole; owing to this, and the grandeur of the contours, the effect of a full-sized figure is produced, and the smallness of the work forgotten. The chiaroscuro is masterly, transparent, and delicate. The tints of the flesh are harmonious, and the tone throughout is clear and pure. The hair is abundant and fair, and the color of the drapery so toned that the texture appears in all its reality.

Compared with Lord Dudley's and the Dresden pictures, the "Magdalen" at Heidelberg shows in the head and figure a different type of character. In the features is some-thing peculiar and characteristic, which proves, I think, that the artist worked directly from a living model. The head has less of an oval form, and is taken more from the side than the others. The pose is considerably more horizontal, and a narrow piece of drapery separates the bosom from the book-a refinement which is not visible in the better known pictures. Another difference is in the shadow thrown by the face upon the left shoulder and over the bust. In the known picture this falls nearly in a straight line, whereas in the Heidelberg "Magdalen" it is far more important, and draws so that it is easy to trace the profile of the face in the lock.

Prior to the adjournment, notice was given that an excursion to Cape May would take sent a more abstract and refined type of wo-msnhood than the one at Heidelberg, In Lord Dadley's Correggio the light which falls on the figure (on the nude especially) forms a stronger contrast with the deep tints of the drapery and the background than in the "Magdalen" of Herr Schmitt, in which it is brightest on the head, subdued on the figure, and diffused over the fore and back ground both of which are simpler and slighter than in the other pictures; the whole motive is less elaborate, but full of originality and freedom Processor Dr. Schliephake concludes, from a minute comparison of the three pictures, that in the one belonging to Herr Schmitt Correggio rendered his first idea of the "Reading Magdalen, and from a living model. He has grasped the principal elements, and produced a composition beautiful in its whole effect and grand simplicity. In the Dresden "Magdalen" the master introduced many variations. The head became a type of loveliness, the figure fuller and richer in exterior attractiveness, and the back-ground was elaborated in keeping; although the general motive is still much like that indicated in the picture, which may show the first conception. The Dudley "Magdalen" is the most elaborate, and most finished of the three works.

The Professor concludes that Herr Schmitt's picture must be the one first painted, as it cannot be supposed that Correggio would produce a simple picture after the more elaborate ones with the same subject.

Accounts, from the pen of Dr. Schliephake, of Heidelberg, of this alleged "Correggio" have appeared in Die Dioskuren, Berlin.

Incidentals. -"Gone over" is the heading to a Boston obituary. Several measles have broken out among tured by a brick in "a controversy with a friend," as a reporter says.

—A California jury recently brought in a verdict "that they had agreed to disagree." This little joke cost them $20.

—Ohio has 394 lodges of Odd Fellows, with a general fund of $715,886, and a widows' and orphans' of $800,018. The male students at Hillsdale College, in Michigan, having adopted class hats, the female students, not to be outdone, have adopted a class bonnet, which consists of the good oldfashioned gingham sun-bonnet. The sisters evidently don't care much about being attractive to the brothers out there.

—The London critics have found another portrait from real life in "Lothair." It is an accomplished English priest, Father Capel, whom Mr. Disraeli masquerades as Mossignore Catesby. It is even said that by an oversight he has allowed the name Capel to be printed instead of Catesby. We don't believe in the portrait theory ourselves, and if such an error has occurred it is probably due to some one besides Mr. Disraeli.

—The Boston Traveller says that a member of a Massachusetts House committee was offered $20,000 to sign a certain report, and consequently made a full explanation to his colleagues thus:—"I went home the other night, and after Harriet and I had retired, says I, 'Harriet, which had you rather have me to do, bring home to you $20,000 for pin money, or an honest husband?" Says she 'Thomas an honest husband?" honest husband?' Says she, 'Thomas, an honest

The "Revolution" Revolving. Mrs. E. Cady Stanton retires from the Revolu-tion, and Miss Susan has gone to the far West to debate with a hard-headed lawyer on Woman's Rights. The Revolution has been sold to a stock company, with Mr. Tilton and Mr. Stud-well largely in interest, and will be the organ of the association over which Mr. Tilton presides.
