THE IRISH LAND BILL. THE passage of the Irish Land bill, by the British House of Commons yesterday, is announced by a cable telegram. The adoption of this tardy and partial measure of relief in the midst of the Fenian agitation in this country is another confession of English statesmen that they are at last recognizing the danger of driving Irishmen from their native land by a cruelly unjust policy, and that fear is combining with a newly-awakened sense of justice and humanity to enforce a partial reform. Nothing can be more iniquitous than the land system which has hitherto prevailed in Ireland, and it reflects lasting discredit and disgrace upon the Englishmen who invented and perpetuated it. Two centuries ago they confiscated the property of the ancient Irish landowners, and to this day the bulk of the Irish people still regard this transfer of title as a shameful wrong, the remembrance of which has been constantly kept alive and embittered by the tyrannical and heartless manner in which the new landlords have used their power. The Irish people are essentially agricultural. They were compelled to be so by acts of Parliament and exercises of monarchial authothority which were prompted by the jealousy of British manufacturers. The total number of factory hands in the whole country is but little mere than 60,000, and the people are obliged to import nearly all their supplies of manufactured goods from England. Thus doomed to agriculture, the ownership of the land, which consists of about 20,000,000 divided into about 600,000 farms, is vested in 8450 men. No pains have been spared to intensify the evils which would naturally result from such a distribution of ownership and occupancy. The landowners are nearly all Protestants and the tenants nearly all Catholics, so that religious difficulties and differences embitter the relations of these parties. Many of the landlords are absentees, who uniformly expend in foreign countries the whole revenue derived from the rents of their estates, and thus continually drain Ireland of her resources. But even these evils are not the worst the people have been compelled to endure. Contrary to the practice of all enlightened countries, the Irish practical farmers have been treated heretofore as tenants at will, who were not allowed to acquire any rights of ownership in their leases or their improvements, and who were therefore constantly at the mercy of capricious landlords and heartless agents. a result of this system wholesale evictions of the most infamous character have repeatedly occurred. All incentives to an improvement of the land have been destroyed, and a host of causes have been set in operation which find their legitimate effects in the terrible famine of 1846, in Irish poverty, indignation, and rebellion, and in the decline of the Irish population from 8,174,000 in 1841 to 5,700,000 in 1861. From the most of these evils one part of Ireland, Ulster, has been comparatively free. She has prospered while other parts of the country, which are naturally more fertile, have sunk deeper and deeper in the dregs of poverty. The main cause of this contrast is now believed to consist in the fact that in Ulster a custom has uniformly prevailed of permitting the tenant to acquire ownership in his improvements and his lease. He could not be ejected arbitrarily. If he wished to abandon his farm, he had a recognized privilege of selling his right of occupancy for the best price he could obtain. This right of occupancy, provided the rent was paid, is frequently worth from fifty to one hundred dollars, and its existence served at once to assure the landlord of his rent and to stimulate the tenant to

The leading idea of Mr. Gladstone's bill, which has just been adopted, is to extend this Ulster system to every portion of Ireland, and its details establish the machinery for practically enforcing this idea, as well as financial facilities for the transfer, purchase, and improvement of land. The British Government, which has done so much to impoverish and oppress the people, now proposes to make a slight exertion and to assume some responsibilities in their behalf. While it deserves credit for taking a step in the right direction, it remains to be seen how efficient the new measure will prove in undoing the work of centuries of wrong. Mr. Gladstone has made a good beginning, however, and as the Land bill follows closely on the heels of the Church bill, he is fairly entitled to great credit for his vigorous efforts to do partial justice to an oppressed people.

an improvement of the land.

THE FENIANS AFTER O'NEILL. THE great Fenian chieftain General O'Neill is in exceedingly bad odor just at the present moment with the rank and file of the Fenian army. The arrest by the civil officers of a general while engaged in leading his troops upon the field of battle has, to say the least, something suspicious about it, and it is boldly charged not only that O'Neill is a coward, but that he deliberately betrayed the cause of Irish liberty. The curses bestowed upon the ONeill are both loud and deep, and many of his late companions-in-arms do not hesitate to threaten his life if any opportunity presents itself after he is released from the custody of the United States authorities, in which the last state of O'Neill will be worse than the In the following statement a comparison is given first. Independently of his suspicious and between the postal service of the United States and cowardly behavior, the Fenians also charge that General O'Neill has in his possession a large amount of money collected from the hard earnings of Irish laborers, which it is suspected that he purposes to appropriate to his own use. This is more than likely, and it only proves the truth of what half the newspapers in the country have said from the first about this whole miserable business. It is perfectly clear to the unprejudiced mind that the various raids against Canada have only been attempted for the sake of stimulating contributions, and that the amount expended from the Fenian treasury for arms and munitions of war is very limited indeed in comparison with what goes into the pockets of such lazy and good-fer-nothing vagabonds as O'Neill, who live and grow rich upon the credulity and folly of their fellow-countrymen. It is scarcely to be expected that the Irish laborers will need the good advice that is given them and hold fast to their hard earnings, but it is possible that with the practical experience they now have of the kind of men who are at the head of the Fenian movement, they will have wisdom enough not to be fooled again, in the same manner at least. The Irish certainly have good cause to hate England, but it is obvious to any but genuine Hibernians that the way to liberate Ireland is not through Canada, and they ought to know by this time that engaging in annual raids against the Kanucks is not the way to secure either the sympathy or support of the people of the United States, without which they can assuredly do nothing, at least with this country as a base of operations.

THE INVITATION TO THE SEVENTH REGIMENT.

THE refusal of Mayor Fox to sanction an official tender of the hospitalities of the city of Philadelphia to the 7th New York Regiment excited an amount of indignation in "the metropolis" that was entirely disproportionate to the occasion. The 7th Regiment is the pet of New York, and although its performances upon the gory plain of battle have not been such as to entitle it to any very marked consideration, it is apparently impossible for New Yorkers to conceive a state of civilization so much behind the age, in a place not one hundred miles from "the metropolis," that its citizens are not inspired with an admiration of the 7th equal to theirs, and their scorn of Philadelphia is consequently expressed in no very measured terms. It is to be hoped that the wounded pride of New York will be, in some measure at least, satisfied with the very cordial invitation extended to the 7th Regiment to partake of the hospitalities of Philadelphia by a number of prominent citizens, with Mayor Fox at their head. There is always a willingness in this city to receive with cordiality any distinguished military organization, even if it did not win laurels at the cannon's mouth, and the 7th Regiment, if it accept this invitation, will certainly have no cause to complain of a want of heartiness in its welcome. An invitation of this kind, however, is something different from what was at first pro posed, and the course of Mayor Fox in vetoing the proposition to entertain the 7th Regiment at the expense of the city was based upon such sufficient grounds as to meet with the approval of all classes of our citizens, except a few persons who felt themselves immediately interested, and as to leave no reasonable cause for complaint for any one. It is not proper that this city should be called upon to pay for the entertainment of the New York 7th or any other regiment, except under very extraordinary circumstances, such as do not exist in the present instance, but it is proper that our private citizens should provide such entertainment if they think there is occasion for it. We therefore hope that the 7th Regiment will visit Philadelphia, and that its members will enjoy themselves so well during their stay in this city that they will have no occasion to regret the absence of any official formalities that might have attended a reception on the part of the municipal government.

By a telegraphic despatch in another column it will be seen that the President has signed the Northern Pacific Railroad bill. The country is to be congratulated on the fact that this great work will now be carried on in spite of the factious opposition of a few malcontents who endeavored to oppose it. The work of building the road will be prosecuted with as much rapidity as possible, and in a very few years the nation will rejoice in another great highway between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

POSTAL STATISTICS. POSTMASTER-GENERAL CRESWELL has submitted to the Senate, in response to a resolution of inquiry from that body, some valuable statistics in connec tion with the postal service of the United States. Mr. Creswell says that the number of letters can only be approximately estimated on the amount of letter postage collected in money, the amount of postage stamps sold, and a reasonable estimate for free matter. The number of letters delivered in the United States during the fiscal year 1868 was estimated at 488,000,000. Mr. Creswell's predecessor, in his annual report of that year, estimated the whole number of letters at 720,000,000, which estimate he has been unable to verify by reliable data, and consider excessive, as shown by the fact that the number of letters delivered in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, where the single rate of postage is only one penny-two cents-and the postage receipts five millions of dollars per annum greater than in the United States, was officially reported for the calendar year 1867 at only 774,831,600. The number of stamps, stamped envelopes, and newspaper wrappers sold, and the value thereof, as stated in the last four annual reports of this department, were as follows:-
