THE DAILY EVENING TELEGRAPH-PHILADELPHIA, TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1870.

NEW.YORRISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, June 7, 1870. The Suburban Jaunt.

The jaunt in the suburbs, to the city man of business, is not by any means what it is poetically represented to be. Given a clear head, an average set of nerves, and a pair of feet moderately useful in pedestrian exercise, and let them set out upon the suburban jaunt at half-past six in the morning, and the chances are ten to one that by the time noon comes the whole man is fagged out, and thirsts for the repose which awaits him only in a return to his old avocations. City men are not intended to take country strolls, unless they work themselves up to it by degrees and take a little at a time. The country is all very pretty as seen through a volume of verses or a stage-coach window. The patches of tender and serene green, with the neat and carefully hoed aisles between, are very picturesque specimens of nature's embroidery; but the perspiration and the dust through which one has to travel for the sake of admiring them are too great a demand upon the endurance of metropolitan man. And so, the suburbs of New York, charming as they are at this season of the year, are to be enjoyed by any one but the suburban in small pieces at a time. Like the scenery of the stage, the scenery of nature often loses half its charms when one comes to actually walk amongst it. I know this sounds very heretical and fearfully unpoetical. But it is the solemn truth with respect to the city-bred man who undertakes a day's jaunt in the country under the delusion that during that brief breathing space he can snatch time to look from nature up to nature's God.

That Sacred Concert.

Mr. Fisk's Sacred Concert on Sunday night at the Grand Opera House was a big thing and a great suchess. Every seat in the vast auditorium was taken. The advertisements, with the strict adherence to truth which is characteristic of those advertisements generally, stated that the orchestra was to consist of one hundred and fifty instruments. If it did, about ninety of them must have been bundled beneath the stage, for only sixty were visible, on the closest calculation. But that makes little difference. The people were pleased. The concert became popular, and is to become a Sunday evening institution. The principal singer is Miss Nully Peiris, a fine-looking woman, possessed of a strong but by no means sweet voice, and the wite of a noted gymnasium keeper. The sacred composer most largely drawn upon was Offenbach, some of whose gems from La Perichole were frantically applauded by that portion of the audience farthest advanced in the spiritual life. Ah! those crowded lobbles and that Sunday evening. It was more the picture of a Sinner's Ramble than a Saint's Rest.

A Dramatic Utopia.

The Dramatic Fund is soon to have a benefit in this city. A very remarkable rumor has been started with reference thereto-so remarkable, that it is no wonder it should be received by the press and public generally with indications of sarcastic doubt. It is to the effect that Hamlet is to be performed with Mr. Booth as "Hamlet." Mr. Fechter as "Laertes," Mr. J. W. Wallack as the "Ghost," Mr. E. L. Davenport as "Horatio," Mr. Brougham as "Polonius," Mr. Jefferson as "First Gravedigger," Mr. Shewell as "The King," Mr. Lester Wallack as "Osric," Mr. Barney Williams as "Second Actor," Miss Leclercq as "Ophelia," and Mrs. J. W. Wallack as "The Quesn." This is a very pretty and ingenuous newspaper-theatrical story. It gives a refreshing view of a near histrionic millennium. when the devil Jealousy that rules the green room and the "coulisses" shall be charmed for a day and night, and professional peace and goodwill, charity and love reign unmolested. It would indeed be a sweet sight to view this distribution of the dramatis persona. The Dramatic Fund is a very worthy and deserving institution: those who are benefited by it belong. in many cases, to the higher walks of the theatrical profession. Actors, as a rule, are an extremely "clannish" set, kind and helpful almost beyond measure to one another in distress. But, goodness of heart has its limits even with them. and it would stop far short of any concession which, like this, would necessitate a sublime self-abnegation. Self-sacrifice is a charming ideal role for the actor to embody; but for a practical, every-day virtue-no, thank you ! Fillal James. James Herbison is a good little boy. He is fifteen years of age-that adolescent period. when, socially speaking, the hobbadehoy commences to "feel his oats," and also to sow those of them which evince a tendency to become wild. Yesterday morning he got offended at his grandmother because the old lady made some remarks about him of a truthful but uncomplimentary character. James is of a very sensitive disposition, as will be seen by the sequel. Some boys would have cried, some would have kicked; but James vindicated his outraged feelings with a determination beyond his years and his grandma's expectations. Pulling from his pocket a loaded pistol, he cocked it at the old lady's chiguon and threatened, if she said a syllable more, "to blow her ---- brains out." This spirited conduct so won upon the heart of a gentleman who happened to be lodging in the same house, that the gentleman exerted his influence and had the boy sent to the Catholic Reformatory, an institution for the express benefit of cases of this peculiarly filial nature. The "Paris-American." And so there is to be an American newspaper started in Paris to be called the Paris-American. Not a bad idea. At first Rumor gave out that Junius Henri Browne, a well-known journalist of this city, and friend of the late Mr. Richardson, was to be the managing editor. But Rumor has just contradicted herself. Like the politicians, she finds it very hard to be consistent. Mr. Browne, to be sure, had some qualifications for the position. In the first place, he don't understand French; in the second place, he has never been to Paris; in the third place, he was imprisoned in several Southern prisons during the war; in the fourth place, he helped to write that immense account of the Barnum conflagration that appeared in the Tribune some years ago; and in the fifth place, he is one of the most successful manufacturers of books that are made to sell. If these are not qualifications enough to vie with those of Mr. Oscar G. Sawyer, who is now announced to be at the head of the enterprise, I don't know what are. Seriously, though. Mr. J. H. E. will probably retain some hand in it, for he can give it that trenchant causticity which such a newspaper needs.

The Beethoven Centennial.

Herculean efforts are being made to render the Empire Skating Rink large enough for the accommodation of the 22,000 at which the average audience is calculated. Every prima donna, tenor, basso, and baritone that could be laid hold of has been selzed and carried captive into the advertisement columns, and Parepa enjoys all the priority which even her jealous and exacting nature could demand. If that earthquake or tidal wave which has so long been spoken of would only arrive some day next week, it would be just in time for the chorus. ALI BABA.

DICKINSON COLLEGE.

The Eighty-seventh Analyersary-The Exercises of Commencement Week-The Sermon by Bishop Janes and Baccalaurente by the President-The Graduating Class. From Our Own Correspondent.

CARLISLE, Pa., June 6, 1879. The eighty-seventh anniversary exercises of Dickinson College were inaugurated on Sabbath morning, June 5. Saturday, lowering and gloomy, had been made cheerful by welcome to returning rebels, graduates, and distinguished visitors. As if to smile upon the scenes of the week, Sunday dawned beautiful and bright, gladly halled by all who would hear,

The Sermon by Bishop James

before the "Society of Religious Inquiry," "Christianity the essential and progressive element in our civilization," was the theme, presented in a logical manner, and made manifest to a large and appreclative audience. But the great event of the day, long anticipated and invested with more than ordinary interest, since for the first time in his administration Dr. Dashiell was to deliver was reserved for Sunday night at 8 o'clock. Long before the hour Emory Chapel was filled to overflowing by expectant friends of the graduating class, which numbers sixteen. Music and "March to the Front" of the young Bachelors in prospectus was the signal for the "opening of fire." For more than an hour President Dashill summed up "The Estimates of a Great Human Life." We would not daub the rainbow-beauty of the rhetoric nor weaken the strong, earnest utterances which it adorned by attempting an opitome. The highest compliment which could be paid by those for whom it was intended was presented through a request from the Seniors that they be permitted to publish the address for the perpetual good of themselves and others. With a graceful acknowledgment of their partiality, the President, however, begged leave to decline the request, characteristically assigning "good and sufilcient reason."

The Baccalnureate Address,

Each train of yesterday brought with it fresh arrivals and valuable additions to the throng, which begins to make Carlisle, stald and quiet as it generally is, the busy centre of pleasing associations and happy rounions. While such was the external, the internal working of the college wrought, through examinations, new juniors out of the late rebellious sophomores, and seniors from the jolly juniors to fill the vacancy so soon to be made by the departure of the class of "70" This latter, though, must be feasted before they go hence.

The President's Dinner

to the class formed a new and intensely interesting feature in this year's programme. The significant words, "Olium meminisse juvabit," are literally true, which beautified the menu, which was well calculated to tempt the palate and make converts to Epicurus.

After the company of seventy-five had fully complied with the President's hospitable injunction, "Dona Prosentis Carpe Latus Hora," the first toast to the trustees was ably responded to by William H. Miller, Esq, of Car-Professor Hillman follo wed in his usual witty way, punning upon the faculty, and saying much, as he always does whenever he speaks. The class of "70" was represented in a racy response by J. Hepburne Hargis, of Va. He claimed for himself and classmates full equality with the faculty, at least at the dinner table. Bishop Janes rose in behalf of the clerical profession, and showed himself a man clear-headed, and of good digestive apparatus. "The Law" called forth well-timed remarks from General Lemuel Todd, of Pa., and was best eulogized by the eloquence and ability always evinced by the distinguished speaker when occasion is fitting. The medical profession seemed "too full for utterance:" while the press, niways up to time, outran the rest, as William Kennedy, of the American Volunteer, jocundly edified and enlivened most meritorious theatres in the United States, | In London, and It was one of the most popular works in the repertoire of the Wilson and Sheriff troupe, who achieved considerable success m this country about thirty years ago. It was also frequently performed by the Seguin troupe, but since their day it has been laid upon the shelf and almost forgotten. We believe, however, that it has occasionally been represented at the theatres as a comic drama, with some of the leading airs incidentally introduced.

The plot of the piece is simple, and good enough perhaps for a comic opera, although from a strictly artistic point of view it is too palpably intended merely as a medium for the introduction of melodies which have but a remote connection with the main theme. This, however, is the case with more pretentious works, and it scarcely need be set down as an inexcusable blemish. The music is light but full of melody, and it is well worth hearing if only as a reminder of what a former generation was accustomed to admire. The fault of the piece is the interminable dialogue, which, with the long intervals between the acts, spun out the performance last night to a very late hour, and wearied the audience excessively. Reduced to something like reasonable proportions-and it could be done without omitting a note of the music-The Postillion of Lonjumeau might casily regain something of its popularity, and it would be an agreeable variation at least from the ordinary operatic routine. The performance last evening was creditable without being very remarkable. Mrs. Bernard was in excellent voice, and acted and sang the part of ""Madeleine" in a manner that excited the heartiest applause. Mr. Bowler, who personated "Chapelou," the Postillion, rather overdld the matter in some particulars, and the celebrated postillion's song in the first act was completely spoiled by the extravagant style in which he sang it. Mr. Bowler has a certain swagger which, although it was not altogether out of character last evening, is neither graceful nor elegant, and in his singing he too often forgets that the highest art often consists in the absence of art. Mr. Henry C. Peakes made an excellent representative of "Bijon," the blacksmith, although a severe cold prevented him from singing with as much effect as usual. The choruses were given in very creditable style, and the orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Behrens, gave an efficient support to the singers.

The City Amusements.

AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC this evening Meyerbeer's great opera of The Huguenots will be performed for the benefit of Mr. S. Behrens, the musical director. This work has never been performed in this city in English, and as the cast will embrace the entire strength of the company, and the orchestra and chorus will be largely increased, a fine entertainment may be expected.

To-morrow evening The Bohemian Girl, with Miss Emma Howson as "Arline," will be given for the benefit of Mr. A. S. Pennoyer. On Thursday evening Mr. Henry Drayton will have a benefit, and on Friday Wallace's opera of Lurline will be performed for the benefit of Mrs. Bernard. AT THE WALNUT Mr. Jefferson will appear this evening as "Rip Van Winkle." AT THE ARCH Bryant's Minstrels will present a great programme of attractions. AT THE CHESNUT a variety of entertaining features are announced for this evening. AN INTERESTING collection of anatomical curiosities are on exhibition at No. 1205 Chesnut street.

BENEFIT TO PETER E. ABEL .- We are pleased to note an exhibition of general interest in the compliment of a benefit which is to be bestowed our well-known and worthy townsman and bibliographer, Mr. Peter E. Abel. The press have readily given publicity to the event, and Mr. Abel's many friends will doubtless meet him in force at the Academy of Music on June 16, where they may be sure the management of the benefit will afford them an enjoyable entertainment.

"Not Guilty," which Mr. Hemphill, of the Walnut Street Theatre, produced many months ago at that establishment, has at length reached Niblo's, where it was produced last night. It was finely presented with respect to scenery, and the success of the acting was due to the fact that many of the actors were Philadelphians-for instance, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Walcot, Mr. Owen Fawcett, Mr. McKee Rankin, Mr. James Taylor, and Mr. F. ## BUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

"The Postillion of Lonjumena" by the Richings Troupe.

The Postillion of Lonjumeau, which was given at the Academy of Music by the Richings troupe, is an old-time English opera as English operas were when the line was distinctly marked between the Italian, German, and English schools. In those days English opera meant music written to English words, if not written by English composers, and it also meant a maximum of dialogue to a minimum of melody. Adam, the composer of The Postillion of Lonjumeau, was a Frenchman, and received his musical education at the Conservatory of Paris, and under the direction of Reicha and Bojeldieu. He wrote a number of vaudevilles and operettas, none of which, however, equalled in merit The Postillion of Lonjumeau, which was first produced in 1836. Although essentially French in style and sentiment, it was given originally as an English opera
