THE AMERICAN CENTENNIAL. The reports of the proceedings connected with the reception of the Congressional delegation which visited this city to inquire into the propriety of officially designating Philadelphia as the proper place for a great national centennial celebration in 1876, contain two things worthy of special notice. We refer to the declaration of Mr. Bingham that the celebration should be held here because, among other reasons, Philadelphia was "foremost in its industries of all the cities in the civilized world," and to the significant announcement by the President of the Union League that the energies that institution were to exercised "hereafter in behalf of this great State of Pennsylvania, and of the great metropolis, Philadelphia." Mr. Bingham, with the genius of a true orator, condensed in a single sentence a forcible presentment of a valid claim of this city to pre-eminence, and an argument which, when viewed in connection with the patriotic associations to which he had previously referred, gives invincible force to the proposition that Philadelphia shall be selected as the place of the centennial celebration. There is certainly no city on this continent, and we know of none in the whole world, where as great a variety of skilled industries are successfully prosecuted. In special departments Philadelphia may be surpassed by this or that American or European manufacturing centre, but it would be vain to seek for any one metropolis which concentrates to an equal extent all the intricate forms of modern industry. Here manufactories of textile fabrics, including silk, as well as cotton, woollen, and mixed goods, are located side by side with the workers of all metals, and our manufacturers are equally ready to furnish silk ribbons or locomotives, carpets or iron ships, stockings or salamander safes, and to crown their triumphs by making the best machinery and tools for the construction of all descriptions of manufactures that can be found in the whole world. No one city in the United States can approach Philadelphia in the completeness and variety of its products, nor in the capacity to furnish, by its home display, a splendid illustration of the industrial progress and position of the United States. For more than a century a large of the capital and portion intellect of Philadelphia has constantly been endeavoring, in an unobtrusive, but steady and spirited manner, to naturalize upon the banks of the Delaware all the important forms of industry known to the Old World; and these efforts have been crowned with marked success. If trade and commerce have been partially neglected, it has only been because the nobler task of creating objects of beauty and utility, and of thoroughly developing the natural resources of this great Commonwealth, have absorbed so large a share of the attention of our citizens. While great industrial expositions may facilitate commerce, their immediate success hinges upon the display of the products of the artist, the artisan, and the manafacturer, and in the roll of the world's industrial army the men who make superior articles stand far above those who merely buy and sell them; so that, as the manufacturing metropolis of the nation, Philadelphia has far higher claims to recognition for the special purpose under discussion than any commercial depot. The declaration of the President of the Union League that its energies would be devoted hereafter to the advancement of local interests furnishes a sure guarantee that, if Philadelphia is selected as the site of a national celebration, or if any similar movement involving local interests is set on foot, all the preliminary arrangements will be conducted with liberality, skill, and efficiency. If the Union League displays in behalf of our industrial interests the same zeal it manifested in support of the national cause during the war, a magnificent representation of all that our city has done or is capable of doing may be contidently anticipated. MR. AKERMAN'S RECORD. The latest advices from Washington render tho confirmation of the Hon. Amos T. Akerman as Attorney-General doubtful, and it is thought that when he arrives at the capital and sees for himself the state of sentiment there, he will request the President to withdraw his name from the Senate. It appears now that Mr. Akerman actually did participate in the Rebellion; that he did so "voluntarily;" and that the political disabilities thereby incurred were removed by an act of Congress approved by the President on the 14th of December, 1869, his name appearing in a list of about 1500. Mr. Akerman's petition asking to be relieved of his disabilities is still on file with the Committee on Reconstruction of the House. It was written by himself, and sets forth that he was a Union man at the outbreak of the Rebellion, and strongly opposed to secession; that he remained a quiet but firm opponent of the Rebellion for some time after the commencement of hostilities; but that after the Confederate Government had been fairly established, he "voluntarily" entered its service and remained therein for about eighteen months. Mr. Akerman further states that, as he had not filled any official position previous to the war, he was not subject to the disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth amandment; but that in consequence of his "voluntary" | absence of Pennsylvania's Senators." We service of the Confederacy, he was unable to take the test oath. He therefore requested that his disabilities might be removed in order that he might accept the office of United States District Attorney for Georgia.

It is claimed, however, by Mr. Akerman's friends, that he gave in his adhesion to the Confederacy for the sake of self-protection, and to enable him to remain in the State, from which he would otherwise have been driven. It is also claimed that since the war he has been an earnest and sincere Republican, in hearty sympathy with the majority of the party in Georgia. These excuses, however, will scarcely be acceptable to the people, and we trust that they will prove equally unsatisfactory to the Senate. This journal has repeatedly advocated universal amnesty as the only substantial basis of a permanent peace and a return of entire harmony between the two sections of the country. We have argued that universal amnesty is not less necessary than universal suffrage, and that the latter having been secured by incorporation in the fundamental law of the land, the former is indispensable to the completion of the good work thus begun. But the advocacy of such a policy does not necessitate the introduction into the Cabinet, at this early day, of a man whose so called Unionism was of such a weak and vacillating character as to permit him to enter the Confederate army, even in a nominal capacity, for the sake of remaining in a State in which rebellion was rampant. Such men as Mr. Akerman can safely be trusted with the duties of inferior positions, but the time has not yet arrived when it is either necessary or expedient to admit them to the counsels of the Chief Magistrate of the nation.

WHITTEMORE.

THE case of Whittemore came up in the House on Saturday, when the Speaker, as a matter of duty, we suppose, presented the credentials of the disreputable dealer in cadetships. General Logan, who conducted the investigation into the transactions of the Congressional cadetship brokers, promptly odjected to his being sworn in again as a member of the body which had so recently declared him unworthy of a seat in it, and after an effort to have his credentials referred to the Committee on Elections, which was very properly headed off, the case was postponed for the time without any reference and will come up again to-morrow, immediately after the morning hour. It is a pity that the House did not have the courage and consistency to dispose of it at once by remanding Whittemore to the care of his constituents; but, since a postponement was inevitable, it is to be hoped that the short interval will be sufficiently long to enable the members who were so righteously indignant at Whittemore's original iniquity to realize the fact that both courage and consistency will be demanded to ensure him his just deserts at present. But the reputation of the House for con rage and consistency is not the only thing at stake, albeit this should be sufficient to settle the question without hesitation. The dignity of the popular branch of our national legislature is likewise involved, as are also its claim to a decent regard for the universal sentiments of the people and a disposition to preserve what little purity is left in official life. The offense of Whittemore was so glaring in its very pettiness; his artful dodge at resigning to escape the expulsion he richly merited, was so characteristic of a narrow mind and a cowardly spirit; the shameless artifices by which his re-election was secured were so patent; and his whole career has presented such a medley of disrepute, that the House cannot readmit him to a seat without belittling itself beyond the measure of expression. The men who speak or vote in favor of reopening the door which was so courageously slammed in his face a few weeks ago cannot do so without partaking of his disgrace, and without encountering the deserved rebuke of an outraged and insulted nation. We cannot but hope that the House will maintain both its own dignity and that of the country in this matter, if not for the sake of the example which it will thus set for the warning of its own members, at least for the sake of Whittemore, who deserves a harsher rebuke than he has yet received, or is likely to receive, under any circumstances. WHERE ARE OUR SENATORS? THE visit of the Congressional committees to our city during the past week has been an occasion of no little importance to our fellowcitizens. According as the impressions made upon our distinguished visitors were favorable or unfavorable, depends the question of whether we or the people of New York are to derive the benefits incident to the coming among us of two or three millions of strangers from all parts of our own country and the rest of the civilized world. To the credit of Philadelphians be it said, that we received these gentlemen like gentlemen, and furnished them with all the knowledge which so limited a stay enabled them to obtain. To the credit of our delegation to Congress in the lower house be it said, that Messrs. Kelley, Myers. O'Neill, and Taylor were untiringly zealous in their endeavors to impress upon their colleagnes the peculiar fitness and adaptability of our city for the centennial celebration. But to the discredit of our delegation in the upper house be it said, that the occasion was not deemed of sufficient importance by Senators Cameron and Scott to call for their presence. Had there been a trout-fishing excursion in contemplation, at which the President and Postmaster-General were expected, we know at least one of our Senators would have made it convenient to be there, especially if there existed a probability that the office of Postmaster of our city would become vacant, and require the appointment of a successor. Judge Kelley, in his admirable speech at the Girard College banquet, expressed the hope "that some good reason existed for the hope so too, but we suggest that upon future similar occasions the merchants of Philadelphia will include in the programme a clambake or something of that kind, together with the resignation of some prominent officeholder. They will come then.

SENATOR FOWLER, of Tennessee, entertains such exalted notions of economy that the most confirmed enemies of the late Andy Johnson will be ready to pardon the vote which he cast in favor of that persecuted individual. A day or two ago he rose in his place to inform the Senate that not more than ene million of the people demanded the abolition of the franking privilege, while some thirty-nine millions, more or less, were energetic in their demand for its continuance. Whereupon Fowler, by an intellectual feat worthy of a Tennessee statesman, and capable of execution by none other, jumped at the startling conclusion that the franking privilege should be extended so as to embrace every American citizen. In other words, he favored the abolition of all letter postage and the carrying of the mails free. Senator Fowler should have gone one step further and proposed that the Government, for the sake of promoting the noble art of letterwriting, should furnish the people with pens, ink, and paper, and take into its permanent employment everybody who has a decent command of the mother tongue and an aptness with the quill, to write the epistles of such unfortunate creatures as are incapable of wielding it and such fortunate creatures as are too busy to attend to their own business.

PITTSBURG is afflicted with a peculiar phase of the woman fever. She has a champion oaress, Miss Charlotte McAlice by name, who hurls defiance at the McKee Club and any woman whom the McKee Club may see fit to set up against her. Such a woman Miss McAlice offers to row, provided only that somebody will back her, and if nobody will back her, then Miss McAlice will row the McKee Club woman on the Fourth of July without backers. Miss McAlice is evidently a young person of mettle, and it is sincerely to be hoped that these objectionable McKee fellows will pit against her a woman who knows how to handle an oar. If we might be permitted to make a suggestion in the matter, we would call the attention of the McKee people to the fact that Miss Anna E. Dickinson is in the habit of putting her oar into almost every puddle that she encounters, and that in all probability she might be induced to enter the aqueous lists against Miss McAlice. Miss Dickinson has recently been paddling extensively around the Great Salt Lake, and has succeeded in creating quite a commotion in the dirty waters of Mormondom. But of late we have heard little or nothing of her achievements, and it is quite possible that she is pining in solitude for another opportunity to bring the eyes of the people once more upon her. If so, she is just the sort of person that the McKee Club should be on the lookout for.
