THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1870.

FAREWELL TO ST. THOMAS. YESTERDAY we published the pathetic proclamation of King Christian IX of Denmark to the people of St. Thomas and St. Johns, announcing the final collapse of the scheme for annexing these appendages of the Danish crown to the United States, and this morning we have from Havana a cable telegram giving the substance of a proclamation recently issued by the Governor of St. Thomas, declaring that the island is again placed under the exclusive protection of the mother country. And thus ends the wild scheme of Mr. Seward for the acquisition of these petty territories at an expenditure of some $10,000,000 in gold. The scheme was a favorite one with the ex-Secretary of State, and it was not less dear to the heart of King Christian, who longed to get his fingers on the $10,000,000, as a means of lightening the heavy burdens incurred by the war with Prussia over the Schleswig-Holstein dispute. It was also a favorite scheme with the people of St. Thomas, who appreciated quite as fully as did the King the "important advantages" which the transfer of their allegiance to the United States would bestow on them. If the people of the United States had been equally disposed to close the bargain, the islands would long since have been part and parcel of our territory, and in a very few years they would have become thoroughly Americanized.

But, from the very outset, the annexation project was regarded with such disfavor in this country that the Senate could not even be brought to a vote upon the question of the ratification of the treaty. If the Senate had condescended to come to a vote, and had rejected the treaty outright, even by a unanimous voice, it is probable that Denmark would have been better pleased than she has been, the studied neglect which the measure encountered being taken, and with some show of justice, as an intentional affront. Notwithstanding the complacent manner in which the failure of the project is treated by King Christian, his proclamation displays considerable temper, and his expression of satisfaction at being relieved from making the painful sacrifice of parting forever with a few thousand faithful subjects is tinged with a slight vein of sarcasm.

His Majesty, in the first sentence, asserts his part in answer to "the repeated and urgent requests of the North American Government, and on this assertion has been based the grievance of Denmark. General Rasslof, who negotiated the treaty while residing at Washington as ambassador, recently resigned his position in the Danish Cabinet because of the seeming bad faith of our Government in the matter, which so preyed upon his mind as to cause him to lose both confidence in himself and courage to face his countrymen in everyday official intercourse. Yet General Raaslof and King Christian know, or ought to know, that the Secretary of State is not the Government of the United States, and that any project which he may see fit to inaugurate or entertain, especially when it involves a heavy expenditure of money, is not binding upon the other branch of the treaty-making power, and places the Senate under no moral or legal obligation to regard it with equal favor. Although this is the case, it would still have been more creditable to the Senate if that body had been gracious enough to give the treaty the attention which its unquestioned importance demanded. By so doing, the Senate would not have sacrificed any of its dignity, and the sensitiveness of the Danish Government would not have been so thoroughly aroused. There is no help for it now, however, and since the Senate has for nearly three yearsthe treaty was dated October 24, 1867-persistently ignored the annexation scheme, it is well for both countries that it has at last been definitely abandoned.

BAD FOR BUTLER.

"WHEN rogues fall out, honest men come by their own," says the adage. A very forcible example of the truth of this proposition was given yesterday in the House of Representatives during the debate on the President's veto of the Rollin White Relief bill. So long as members of Congress are on good terms with each other there is very little chance that the public will sknow anything about the moving springs of legislation. There are vague rumors of corruption, bribery, and all manner of unrighteousness, but experience has shown that it is almost impossible to bring home his guilt to any particular offender: and even when, as in the case of the carpet-bagger Whittemore, Congress does make an example, there is an uneasy suspicion that it is only for the sake of attracting attention from others even more guilty.

Political differences sometimes lead to violent language, but they are scarcely ever sufficiently bitter to incite a personal attack, and it is only when a couple of honorable gentlemen have a private quarrel that they can be relied upon to expose each other's misdoings. Messrs, Butler and Farnsworth have a private quarrel of long standing, and they have each been making threats and damaging insinuations, but have hitherto refrained from an engagement at close quarters. Yesterday, however, Farnsworth saw an opportunity to give the hero of Fort Fisher a knock-down blow without rendering himself pins by making the explicit charge that be had been paid the sum of $2000 for advocating the claim of Rollin White in the House. This attack was totally unexpected by Butler, and in his excitement and rage he substantially admitted all that is necessary to prove the truth of Farnsworth's assertion. Butler stated that the amount was paid to him for arguing the case in the Supreme Court. Farnsworth, however, estopped this plea by citing the statute that declares that a member of Congress who receives any fee for a matter pending before Congress, or in any of the departments, commits a misdemeanor, punishable by indictment, and he then went on to show that the member from Massachusetts had made a vigorous protest against White's claim when it was first brought before Congress, but that after having been retained as counsel in the Supreme Court he adopted another view of the matter, and now appeared upon the floor of the House as the advocate for allowing the claim despite the President's veto. Thereupon the ire of Butler became excessive, and he had nothing to say in reply except that Farnsworth had more beard than brains. This of course did Mr. Butler no good, and the result of Farnsworth's attack was that the House believed the truth of his assertion, and sustained the veto of the President by a large majority.

This case is interesting as it gives a very clear explanation of the manner in which members of Congress are purchased by lobbyists. There is, perhaps, very little downright bribery, but there are few persons who will be able to see much difference between the out-and-out purchase of Mr. Butler's voice and vote in this instance and the payment of a fee to argue a case in the Supreme Court upon which he would also be called to sit in judgment as a member of the House of Representatives. Butler admits that he took the money, and now it remains to be seen whether there is sufficient virtue in the House to expel him as Whittemore was expelled. It will not do to make fish of one and flesh of the other, of the two offenses that of Butler is the most entitled to condign punishment. The moral effect of the action of the House in Whittemore's case was undoubtedly very great, but Whittemore is a miserable scalawag about whom nobody cares the toss of a sixpence, but the prompt expulsion of the redoubtable member from Massachusetts would do more for the regeneration of Congress than all other influences put together, and it is to be hoped that there is enough virtue and self-respect left among the members to serve him according to his deserts.

BASE BALL.

THE game of base ball yesterday between the Athletics of this city and the Red Stockings of Cincinnati, was not satisfactory to those who staked their money on the former club on the strength of their victory over the that the treaty of cession was entered into on | Atlantics last week, but to those who believe that things are not always what they seem, the result was neither unexpected nor unaccountable. The innocents who have not lost all their faith in the better qualities of human nature of course lay all the blame upon the umpire, but that unfortunate individual cannot be made responsible for evils that are the natural growth of a system that can produce no good fruits. Base ball as a means of healthful recreation is entitled to encouragement, but it is a notorious fact that the playing members of the leading clubs are all paid large salaries for their services; that immense sums are realized from the spectators who attend to witness matches, so that it is to the interest of the players to keep up an excitement by making the fortunes of the game vary as much as possible; and that an unlimited amount of gambling is indulged in, so that a direct encouragement is given to jockeying of every description. A few weeks ago the Red Stockings were defeated by the Atlantics. Last week the Atlantics were defeated by the Athletics, all reports of the game stating that the New Yorkers "muffed" in a shocking manner. The result of these two games was to excite an unusual interest in the contest between the Cincinnati and the Philadelphia clubs that came off yesterday, and to stimulate the betting. The consequence was that those who staked their money on the Athletics are out of pocket considerably, for that club followed the example of the Atlantics and played a "muff" game, throwing the victory into the hands of the Red Stockings.

The result of this sort of thing will be that decent men cannot afford to risk their reputation by having anything to do with baseball, and the game will be left entirely in the hands of the gambling fraternity. It has very nearly come to this now, and a few more games such as those of yesterday and last week will reduce base-ball to the level of the race course and the prize-ring.

THE great men at Washington are devoting no small portion of their time to crimination and recrimination, and the great questions of the day, apart from those involved in the Butler-Farnsworth controversy, appear to be whether General Fremont swindled the Frenchmen so badly that his railroad projects should not be endorsed by the Senate; whether Cuban bonds were used to influence the action of Congressmen; and whether the negotiations of the San Domingo treaty are undefiled by tyranny and corruption. Thus, on the one hand, accusations are multiplied that money surreptitiously finds its way into the pockets of leading politicians, while constant delays attend the efforts to reduce the taxes imposed on the people. Republican Congressmen must speedily amend this record if they wish to be victorious in the fall

MEAN BUSINESS .- The names of leading men are being forged to malicious attacks upon journalists and others. The last case is that of Vice-President Colfax, to whom is liable to much damage in return, and he attributed a preposterous reference to one of accordingly lifted Butler completely off his | our former Philadelphia newspaper men, George Alfred Townsend. We have seen a letter from the Vice-President's secretary denying this. So awkward a way of doing a mean thing is calculated to help Townsend rather than to annoy him.

> SENOR CASTELAR, the great Spanish orator whose speech in favor of religious freedom electrified the Cortes some months ago, has recently made an equally eloquent effort in favor of the immediate abolition of slavery in Spanish territory. In the course of this speech he quoted the proclamation of Abraham Lincoln amid loud applause, and pressed home upon the Cortes such cogent arguments that the Government plan for gradual emancipation was materially weakened. The ardor and ability displayed by the great Spanish orator in behalf of freedom will do much to secure for the party he represents the sympathies of the liberal men of all nations, and to strengthen the prevailing hope that the conflict now pending in Cuba will secure liberty to the slave, if not to the Creole. The insurgents are professedly in favor of unconditional and immediate abolition, and each new Spanish demonstration in favor of the same doctrine tends to give the slaves a double guarantee of freedom.

> No Postponement.—A rumor having been circulated that the contemplated convention of Republicans from the minority Congressional districts of this State, which was announced to meet on the Fourth of July, has been postponed, we are assured that such is not the case, and that the gathering will take place at the Girard House, in this city, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the day named.

THINGS are decidedly looking black in Paris for the disciples of Brillat-Savarin. The general failure of the oyster fisheries on the west coast of France, and particularly at Arcachon, caused by the intense heat of last summer, sent these pleasant bivalves up to fancy prices; and now a new disaster seems to be impending-the supply of crawfish is nearly exhausted. No less than five millions and a half of those delicious crustacea, which play so important a part in the famous "bisque aux ecrevisses" and "vol-an-vent a la financiere," are yearly consumed in Paris; and for many years France has forwarded to the capital only an infinitesimal portion of the total quantity required. In 1853 the first importations were made from Germany, and since that period the Rhine provinces, Hanover, Wurtemberg, and Holland have been successively ransacked and exhausted. The greater number are now derived from Silesia and Posen, but the crawfish being by no means prolific, and not attaining a marketable size under five years, the supply by no means keeps pace with the demand, and its utter and speedy failure is considered highly probable.
