FRIDAY, JULY 1, 1870.

THE REJECTION OF THE SAN DO MINGO TREATY.

THE fate of the San Domingo treaty was definitely settled yesterday, by its rejection in the Senate, the vote standing 28 in favor and 28 against it. This result was due to the disclosures recently made which rendered it a most certain that the proposition to annex San Demingo to the United States was a gigantic job by which a ring of speculators hored to get rich, while the occupation and government of the island might probably cost us many times what it was worth. If the rejection of this treaty, however, means that we are to abandon the partial foothold we have obtained, it can scarcely be considered as other than unfortunate, and the anxiety of the President to secure a favorable consideration for the scheme of annexation arose from the fact that he appreciates keenly how important it is that we should obtain a commanding position in the Gulf of Mexico.

So far as mere territory is concerned, we have quite as much, if not more, than we want; but if any one will examine the map of the United States, it will be seen at a glance that there are at least three points of strategic importance that we ought to be able to command in such a manner that it will be impossible for our foreign neighbors to annoy us as they certainly can do now. These points are the mouth of the St. Lawrence river, the entrance to the Gulf of Mexico, and Puget Sound. The first would necessitate the annexation of that part of Lower Canada to the south of the St. Lawrence; the second the acquisition of San Domingo, Cuba, or some other large West India Island; and to command Puget Sound we should have possession of Vancouver's Island, which we very foolishly allowed the British to bully us out of at the time of the "fifty-four-forty or fight" controversy. We think that the energies of American statesmen ought to be earnestly and energetically directed to the acquisition of the territory necessary for us to command the positions named, and although our necessities are not so pressing that we are under any obligations to make forcible demonstrations at the present time, yet the fact that certain great national objects are to be gained should never be lost sight of, and no opportunities be allowed to pass by unimproved for rounding off the corners of our dominions in the manner suggested. San Domingo would answer admirably for a West Indian station, and we ought to get possession of it if we can do so without being swindled to an unlimited extent. It is now proposed adopt the same course that was pursued in the case of Texas, and to pass a joint resolution of both houses of Congress admitting San Domingo to the Union. How this will operate to defeat the calculations of the "ring" we are not prepared to say, but it is apparently a preferable way of definitely settling the question. During the Rebellion the absolute necessity of a West Indian station was conclusively demonstrated. We have in that neighborhood no port except Key West, which is practically worthless as a military or naval station; and however much we may object to the conduct of the agents employed to negotiate the treaty with San Domingo, the desire of the President to secure for it a favorable consideration by the Senate was inspired by sound statesmanship, and it will be a matter for regret if by a combination of unfortunate circumstances the prize is allowed to slip through our fingers.

GENERAL WM. B. THOMAS ON THE WAR-PATH.

He would be a rare and very remarkable man who could for any considerable length of time represent an American constituency in the lower house at Washington without making a mistake, or giving some just ground for complaint. This would be especially the case if the Representative had brains, application, and powers of debate constituting him a leader. To a party man whose voice is never heard in general debate, and whose influence is never felt in giving shape to great and important party or national questions, the road at Washington is not a difficult one to travel. Especially if his name comes on the roll well down, say among the O's and N's, he can without much effort of mind follow the votes of his party friends who precede him in answering yea and nay. But, as before remarked, it is somewhat difficult for a leader, be he ever so honest and able, so always act and vote as not embarrass great vital interests and at the same time not array against him special interests, maybe in his own district. These observations are made in view of the charges preferred against Judge Kelley by General William B. Phomis. at a late meeting called in his interest by some disinterested patriots in the Fourth district. After wading through the numerous counts of the indictment, we cannot but express our astonishment that in so long, conspicuous, and eventful a political career Judge Kelley should have given his enemies so little ground upon which to rest charges. It should be a source of congratulation to himself and friends that after so many eventful years of public service, in the midst of the most important epoch in our history, an indictment should contain literally nothing but that which, if honestly viewed and dispassionately discussed, must redound to his honor and credit. There is one count in the indictment brought by General

Thomas that is unworthy any Pennsylvanian, and is a low appeal that can only be valuable to Thomas in proportion as the people of the Fourth district are intelligent or ignorant

We allude to his charge that Judge Kelley voted against the repeal of the duty upon imported coal. Does General Thomas count so much upon the ignorance of the people as to believe that they are not aware that one of the great sources of wealth possessed by our State is her vast coal-fields?-and he should know that the Pennsylvanian who would be traitor enough to oppose this great interest would be an unworthy and dishonored repre-

It may be pertinent in this connection to allude briefly to the vast extent and value of our anthracite coal-fields alone, which underlie four hundred and seventy square miles within the limits of the Commonwealth, and are the only deposits of anthracite on the continent. In the working of these vast coalfields there is employed in direct mining capital, and in canals and railroads constructed almost exclusively as a means for transporting coal, over $150,000,000. Over two hundred firms and incorporated companies are engaged in mining, and the product last year was over 16,000,000 tons.

If General Thomas can urge no stronger claim to public confidence and support than the promise to assist in destroying one of the most important interests of the Commonwealth, he will find in October next that he has counted too much on clap-trap and deplorably underestimated the intelligence of our people. Judge Kelley is recognized in all sections of the Union as one of the most able supporters of the great industries of our country, and the most fearless and uncompromising enemy of British free trade. It would have been a most laughable commentary upon his constituency if, as the champion of American protection, he should have voted against protection of American coal, especially as that interest was in his own State. Such inconsistency may suit General Thomas, or be overlooked by small ward politicians, but would be unpardonable in a gentleman occupying the position that Judge Kelley does. The Judge's most bitter ensmies are the consistent opponents of a protective system, and it was to be hoped that no Pennsylvanian, and certainly no aspirant for Congressional honors, would have the temerity to assault him for consistent labor, vigilance, and devotion to the great industrial interests of our State.

AN ENGLISH VIEW OF THE FENIAN FIASCO .- The Pall Mall Gazette makes the following comments on the late Fenian fiasco:-

It was not unreasonable at this distance for the British public to be thrown into an unpleasant state of nervousness at the first threatening of Fenian invasion, and the hysterical laugh which followed the collapse of the enterprise was a natural result of the completeness and suddenness of the relief. The press has but faithfully echoed the average feeling in its different phases-fear of the invaders, surprise at their weakness, amusement over their discomfiture. But now that we have once more got to our coolly and ask ourselves whether we have really to thank our own good luck, or the valor of the Canadians, or the inherent silliness of the Fenjans, so entirely as has been supposed for the utter failure of the attempt on the Dominion. General Lindsay's speech will, to a good many people, seem to be decisive, and prowess of the colonial volunteers, which he praises, the direct solution; but we regret to differ wholly from that authority, and fear that, if his utterance be rightly reported, the worthy general has been speaking more under the influence of the sentiment known as "buncombe" than is quite right or wise. Is it likely, or even possible, that a soldier like O'Neill, who has seen hard service under such a first-rate commander as Sherman, would have risked his name in an enterprise which had within it no conceivable element of success? Were the 2000 filibusters, of whom his actual force consisted, all the strength upon which the invasion of Canada was to be based? Those who have studied the American papers for the last three years, and learnt how widely the Fenian organization is spread, will probably hold a very different opinion. O'Neill must have known how insufficient for any effective purpose were the means actually in hand; but he probably regarded his immediate following as a mere advance guard, which thousands of Saxonhating Irishmen from the Western cities would have pressed on to join, had the newspapers been able to report, as on the former occasion, a success over the first Canadians encountered. The repulse, however slight, of a chance body of volunteers would again have been magnified by the papers into a "glorious victory over the British," and been followed by a general rush to the border of all those who had hitherto contented themselves with talking or subscribing in the Fenian interest. That this calculation was over-sanguine is very possible; out in making it the American Government was necessarity considered as remaining neutral, and it is in this matter that the Fenian programme was utterly mistaken, and the project founded upon impossible conditions. That proclamation of President Grant, that movement of Meade's detachments to the frontier which General Lindsay somewhat rashly pronounces "of no use," completely severed the marauders from the widespread support on which they reckoned, and left them opposed, without help or hope, to the gathering militia of the Dominion. From the hour that Grant spoke out the policy of his Government the Fentan invasion be came an isolated raid of a few desperadoes: and it is because we feel that under a different guidance the Washington Cabinet might have fanned the spark O'Neill kindled into a serious flame that we are bound to protest against the deciarations of those who, because the danger disappeared more suddenly than was hoped, ignore the prompt friendliness of conduct which effectually prevented its ever becoming serious. PRUSSIAN HONOR .- An English paper says: -A strange story, which we certainly cannot bring ourselves to believe, comes to us through a correspondent who has every title to our confidence. It relates to a duel at Berlin. A ballet-dancer of the name of R-, belonging to the Royal Opera of Berlin, had got into a quarrel with the Graf von 8-, an officer in the Royal Guard, and had insulted his adversary in the presence of several of the officers of the Guard. But the officer was much too fine a gentleman to fight a man so much beneath him in social standing as a ballet-dancer. A duel, if it can he so called, was accordingly agreed on, by the terms of which the first of the two opponents who was seen without a glove on his left hand was to kill himself. It may easily be imagined that for several days neither Count von S-nor R-took off their lefthand gloves either by night or day. At last the unfortunate R- having gone out for a walk with a young lady to whom he was engaged to be married, his companion teased him so much about his obstinacy in keeping his glove on that in a fatal moment he bared his hand. Just then Count von S passed, accompanied by two friends, and immediately called their attention to the fact that R .-had forfeited his life. The same evening the unfortunate dancer shot himself through the heart, in accordance with the conditions agreed upon.
