THE WAR IN EUROPE.

THE FRENCH SCHOOL OF WAR.

Napoleon's Veteran Lenders - Their Services in the Past - Algiers, the Crimen, and Italy. The African campaigns which found the first field of active military duty for Marshals MacMahon, Canrobert, Bazaine, Vaillant, Forey, Randon, Changar-nier, Lebœuf, and Count Palikao, followed the de-scent on Algiers by the French, caused like the pre-sent war by an affront to the French Minister. A new generation had arisen since the wars of the new generation had arisen since the wars of the First Empire, and the young seldiers welcomed the field of adventure which Africa presented. The French occupation of Algiers met with little effective opposition from the Turks, but it aroused the fierce, independent spirit of the native tribes, resulting, for a time, on the part of the French, in the shedding of rivers of blood and the spending of millions of treasure, without securing little more of the soil than their own garrisons. In 1831, the officers who are now the veterans of the French army found themselves confronted by the French army found themselves confronted by the daring chieftain Abd-el-Kader, and for seventeen years this extraordinary man defended with resolute bravery and masterly skill his native land against the invaders. The nature of the campaigns in which the officers named took part, as well asothers destined to be eminent before the close of hostilities, may be realized from some of the leading incidents. Marshal Clausei was sent, after some years of very indecisive fighting, with instructions to crush the Emir at one blow, who, on his part, fully alive to all that was going on, was not slow to meet his enemies. He promulgated the most terrible denunciations against all who should be found siding with the French or supplying them with provisions; the consequence of which was that the French garrisons tain food except by foray, in which friend and foe were treated precisely alike. The Emir mustered upwards of 50,000 men, and by his maneuvres succeeded in postponing the French advance until the wet season. It was not until November that the wet season. It was not until November that the French arrived at Oran, on their march against Mascara. Mostacanem and Arzend were strongly garrisoned, and Clausel advanced into the enemy's country with 13,000 men. After several days of constant fighting, he succeeded in reaching Mascara, and avenged himself on Abd-el-Kader by reducing it to a heap of ruins. This wretched exploit achieved, the French were obliged to retreat again. They next took were obliged to retreat again. They next took Temen in January, 1836, and garrisoned it, and then returned to Oran. But although they defeated the Kabyles in a battle, the indefatigable Emir har-assed their retreat, which they only effected after severe losses. This murderous and savage mode of warfare, which was nothing more than a system of forays, was without practical result to the French. As soon as the army had retired the inhabitants of Tiemcen rose upon the French garrison, their convoys were cut off, and General Arianges, the second in command, was ordered to established a second in command, was ordered to established a fortified camp on the Tafna, for the purpose of covering Tlemcen and keeping open the communications between that post and the districts favorable to the French. In this advance he was attacked by the Emir and 10,000 Arabs, and driven back on his fortified camp, where he was shut up and compelled to remain until relieved by Bugeaud at the head of 4000 men. Soon after Bugeaud gained an important victory over the Emir, which for a time repressed his ciforts against the invaders. In warfare like this, the present leading generals in the French army commenced their active military career. It was calculated to accustom them to the horrors of war, to make them equal to trying emerhorrors of war, to make them equal to trying emergencies, and to render them capable of enduring all the fatigues attendant on fighting in mountainous country and under a burning sun.

The Crimean campaign next called to the field the veterans of the French army. The armies of the allies effected a landing at the Bay of Enfrato-nia, September 14, 1854. On their southward march toward Schastopol they encountered the Russian forces, commanded by Prince Mentchikon, on the banks of the Alma. A bloody battle was fought September 20, in which the Russians were compelled to retreat. On September 25 the British forces seized Balaklava, and on October 3 the regular siege of the southern pertion of Sebastopol commenced, the Russians having sunk vessels in the entrance to the harbor, and thus rendered the city inaccessible by maritime force. On October 25 and November 5 the Russians vainly attempted to annihilate the besieging force in the battles of Balaklava and Inkermann, but afterwards confined themselves mainly to the defense; theis frequent sorties being intended more to harass andr retard the siege than to relieve the place definitely. At Inkermann, where Canrobert won special distinction, the Russians lost in killed 3011, and wounded 5997; the English 462 killed and 2143 wounded; the French 389 killed and 1337 wounded. Among the sorties which marked the further progress of the siege, some assumed almost the character of regular field battles; for instance, an unsuccessful attack of the French upon a new redoubt; their first assault upon the Malakoff and Redan (June 15, 1855), and the battle of the Tchernaya (August 16), in which the Russians, numbering 50,000 infantry and 6000 cavalry, made a last effort to break the aggressive force of the enemy. The trenches having been driven so near the Russian defensive works that another assault could be ventured, the final bombardment was opened September 5, and lasted for three days. On September 8 the Malakoff and Bedan were stormed and taken by the Allies after a desperate struggle, and the slege was virtually ended. In this campaign the present leading French officers first engaged in war on a large scale, conducted with all the resources which the ablest engineers and inventors could afford, and demanding the most desperate

The Italian war offered the French army employ-ment on the historic field of Napoleon's campaigns. The first engagement with the Austrian forces was near Montebello, where their left wing was defeated. The allies being on the point of outflanking their right wing (battles of Palestro, May 31 and June 1), they recrossed the Ticino, and were routed in the great open battle of Magenta, June 4. Without risking a defense of the lines of the Odda and Oglio ing a defense of the lines of the Odda and Oglio rivers, they retreated to the line of the Mincio. There, in the great battle of Solferino, they were defeated June 24, and peace soon followed. This was, with the exception of the Mexican campaign, in which Marshal Bazaine was conspicuous, the last conflict in which the French Marshals had an opportunity of engaging in warfare on an extensive

PRUSSIA BEFORE THE WAR.

Widespread Discontent in North Germany with the Military Organizations-The People Muttering Under the Iron Hand of Bismarck.
From a letter to the New York Tribune, dated Berlin, June 29, several days before the war cloud gathered over Europe, we take the following interesting extracts:—

"Within the last two years discontent has steadily been growing up in North Germany with the bur-dens that are imposed by the military organization. As the Diet will acquire control of the army budget next year, by the expiration at that time of the annual appropriation fixed by the Constitution for the present establishment, the question of partially relieving the people from this burden is the chief one discussed in the election campaign that has just opened. The conflict which arose in Prussia in 1859 was chiefly because the new organization of that was chiefly because the new organization of that year had no legal authority, the representatives for that reason year after year refusing to recognize it in settling the budget. Precisely the same conflict cannot now arise, for the Constitution of North Germany has itself created the present establishment; and the Diet, in attempting to procure a reduction of the army, cannot hold the advan-tageous position of resisting encroach-ments on their rights; it must acquire a control over the army itself, which, under the Constitution, it cannot directly exercise. The Constitution provides for general liability to military service, including three years in the regular army, four years in the reserve corps, and five years in the Landwehr, and for the annual payment of 225 thalers per head of the army on a peace footing, at present subject to the control of the King, as Com-mander-in-Chief of the Federal forces, but after the sist of December, 1871, payable into the Federal

"Upon the increase of population the present rate "Upon the increase of population the present rate of one per cent, of the population will not apply to the future, and the number of the army will not grow with the growth of the population, but the right of fixing a new percentage is reserved for the usual course of legislation, which must conform to the constitutional provisions respecting the general liability to military service. However, until a law is agreed upon, the separate States must continue to pay over into the Federal treasury the proportion at present established. The principal change that will be brought about at the end of 1871 concerns the disbursements for the army, for thereafter they must be voted every year in the settlement of the budget, as all every year in the settlement of the budget, as all other expenses. Thus it will be seen that as far as regards the organization of the army the provisions of the Constitution are sufficiently indefinite to give those who wish its reduction a plausible ground for those who wish its reduction a plausible ground for attempting to acquire such a control over it as may enable them to carry out their purpose; they claim that this organization terminates with 1871, and can then once more oe brought in question. This doctrine is contested by the Government with the assertion that this organization of the army was chiefly intended to obtain permanency through the preliminary trial during the transition period, and that the Dict has no right to abuse its right over the budget by attempting to obtain a reorganization of the army, asserting that "no prudent, patriotic man would lend his support to a plan for calling in question institutions upon which the strength and security of our national commonwealth, and thereby the welfare, the industrial interests and prosperity of the people, are established "

"It is mainly those in whose interest it is claimed that these institutions are maintained who fall to that these institutions are maintained who fall to recognize their beneficial results. The tendency in most of the industrial classes is toward the organization of parties hostile to the military establishment of the country. While hitherto the chief opposition to the army was made by the Progressives, now there is no liberal party except the National Liberals who support the present organization. Very great dissatisfaction with the National party has arisen, and it is probable that in the next elections they will lose considerably to the more extreme parties; but it now seems very doubtful which of parties; but it now seems very doubtful which of these will profit most by the loss of the National Liberals,"

POOR FRANCE!

Lord Clarenden, the Empress Eugenle and the Prince Imperial. The Journal Officiel the other day, contained the announcement that the Court would go into mourning for eight days, beginning with Sun-day, July 8, for Jerome Bonaparte Patterson, who died recently at Baltimore. Meanwhile, no official announcement has been made as to when, if ever, the Court will go into mourning for the Empress' father, who also died a short time ago. If it is possible to speak with certainty on such a matter at any time, it may be permitted us to believe that in the death of Lord Clarendon the present Empress of the French has the right to mourn a father, who, although the fact was a notorious one both in England and France, never, so great was his modesty, allowed himself to claim in public that distinguished honor. From all that I can learn this story has the strongest claims to be believed. It is not of the same category as the tales that give so many and so noble fathers (to say nothing of the ignoble ones, like General Fleury for example), to the poor little Prince Imperial; it is said to be befleved in high places. For my part, if it be true, I think the Empress happy, that if she cannot and she certainly cannot be congratulated on her mother, she may at least take some comfort in knowing that she had a father she needn't be ashamed of. But what a Court, where rake as you may in the annals of either side of the house you come upon nothing but such stories as these!—Paris Cor. N. Y. Tribune.
