(SUNDATS BECEPTED), AT THE EVENING TELEGRAPH BUILDING. No. 108 S. THIRD STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

MONDAY, AUGUST 1, 1870.

to The earliest regular edition of THE EVENING TELEGRAPH goes to press at 12 o'clock, and the subsequent regular editions at 21, 31, and 41. Whenever there is important news of the progress of the Euroyean war, extra editions will be issued after his hour, and before the regular time for the early edition.

GRANT'S DISTRIBUTION OF PA-

TRONAGE. Ir is rumored that a number of active Republicans are disgusted with repeated exhibitions of what they deem the proclivity of the President to attach undue importance to wealth in the distribution of patronage; and Pennsylvanians couple with this complaint the allegation that he exhibits an extraordipary preference for citizens of New Jersey over those of this State. If these charges are based solely on the petty jealousies of sorebeaded office-seekers the public can have no sympathy with them, but if they have a more solid foundation they will diminish Grant's sopularity and lower the general estimate of his character. It is said that no recommendations for office are so potent with him as those which are backed up by financial solidity either in the applicant or his endorsers, and that he judges place-hunters by rules similar to those which govern the directors of bank in discounting notes; that talent patriotic civil service is deemed enworthy of recognition if it is allied with poverty; and that moneyed influences thus become as powerful at the White House as they are in Wall street. It is not pretended that he pursues this course from corrupt motives, the gist of the imputed offense being mistaken judgment. Perhaps he has been pestered by so many needy, greedy applicants that he has jumped to the conclusion that the interests of the nation could be ...ost safely entrusted to men whose pecuniary position places them beyond the reach of emptation; but it is an easy matter to carry his doctrine to extreme limits. Instances abound in which riches and rascality go hand in hand, and penury has not ceased to be compatible with the purest integrity. General Grant is well aware that wealthy officers are not always the most reliable or efficient in military operations, and he should remember that this rule often holds good in civil life. If he had carried out his idea of making the richest merchant in America the Secretary of the Treasury, we doubt very much whether A. T. Stewart, with millions. would left an official record half as creditable as that established in the same office by povertystricken Alexander Hamilton; and if Grant wishes to infuse energy, talent, and vigorinto every branch of his administration, at home and abroad, he will be more apt to accomplish that end by securing the aid of the giant intellects of the nation than by hunting up men who value office mainly on account of the social halo with which it surrounds them. and who figure to greater advantage at dinner parties, receptions, balls, and other festivities, than in the labors and intellectual conflicts which constitute the true glory of a useful official career. This nation is still too young and too republican to set a high value upon goldsticks-in-waiting or to be pleased with the sacrifice of its patronage upon the altar of Mammon. Even the aristocratic governments of Europe have learned that when rea work is to be done their titled nobodies and remember. The specifications of the other charge, about the preference of New Jersey over Pennsylvania, are based upon the appointment of a Cabinet officer, a Judge of the Supreme Court, and a Minister to England from the little Commonwealth on the other elde of the Delaware. Considering that New Jersey can scarcely be expected to sustain the Republican party more than once or twice during a century, and that she has at best but a small electoral vote, politicians do not understand why such pains should be taken to propitiate her at a time when the potential Keystone State is systematically snubbed. They are willing to acknowledge the charms of her sea-side watering-places, the superiority of the beach at Cape May, the vigor of the breeze at Atlantic City, and the completeness of the race-course at Long Branch. They concede the glories of her Vineland, the latent fertility of the neglected soil of her pine forests, the productiveness of her truck gardens, the depth of her marl beds, and the veraciousness of her mosquitoes. But they do not discern in these characteristics, or in any palpable signs of the ineffable supeciority of the President's New Jersey favorites, sufficient reasons for his partiality for or neighboring Commonwealth and simulsneous neglect of our own.

THE ELOQUENCE OF O'NEIL.

THE eloquence of O'Neil is not more infinitesimal than his valor, and vice versa. With the tongue as well as with the sword he s capable of cutting some very fanciful dourishes. The serious drawback to the impressiveness of either sort of display is its unfailing futility. Whether the Fenian leader draws his Damascus blade in the very teeth of the "dhirty British baste" sometimes inadvertently yelept a Lion, or rolls out the linked sweetness of his perceptible brogue in the presence of a Federal court, he is unfortupate enough to encounter failure. In short. O'Neil was born to be a flighty and fluent finde Whether or not he was also born to be a Fenian is a matter of doubt. On Friday last, when arraigned before the United States Circuit Court at Windsor, Vermont, O'Nell came up to the scratch "smiling," The offense with which he was charged was a serious one. The endangering of the peace between two great nations is no trifling matter. O'Neil knew this last May when he marshalled his hosts on the border. And he was dead in earnest about his disreputable business-at least he took a solemn oath that nothing of him but his dead body could possibly be dragged back across the boundary line, after he had once contrived to cross it alive. That the world was not compelled to witness the harrowing spectacle of the transportation over the line of O'Neil's mangled corpse, bleeding, like that of Bozzaris, at every pore, was no fault of O'Neil. If his corporal embodiment had come within reach of the teeth and nails of the "baste" which went prowling up and down, just on the other side of the line, seeking a Fenian whom it might devour, there can be no doubt that little else than the phosphates which enter into O'Neil's anatomy would ever have enriched the sterile hillsides of Vermont. The presence of a deputy marshal and a close carriage spoiled the sanguinary show. But O'Neil meant to fight if he could but have the chance, and in seeking his opportunity he violated the laws of the land. For so doing he deserved to be hanged by the neck till dead, for at least one of his deluded followers was done to death by the British "baste," and O'Neil was morally and in matter of fact guilty of participation in the murder as an accessory and instigator. For his double transgression an imprisonment of two years and a fine of ten dollars is a very slight expiation.

When O'Neil was confronted by his acousers in the court-house at Windsor on Friday, he was "composed and gentlemanly in his deportment," says the sympathizing young man who reported the case, and he "smiled" -yes, he had the imperturbability, as well as the impudence, to "smile," when he put in a plea of guilty to the charge of violating the neutrality laws of his adopted country. This little farce of a trial is a good joke, thought O'Neil; and such huge proportions did the joke assume that his jollity thereat lighted up his warlike features with a perceptible "smile." This trick of pleading guilty was the end of the joke, however, although the "composed and gentlemanly" O Neil did not see it in that light for a matter of twenty-four hours. On Saturday the Fenian hero was told to "stand up" again in the criminal's dock, to give such reason as he had why sentence should not be passed upon him. It was then that the eloquent tongue of the "composed and gentlemanly" O'Neil was unloosed. He had something to say about this business of passing sentence upon him for venturing to disturb the British "baste" in his lair. The tender-hearted young man who furnished us with a report of the case states that at this point O'Neil "proceeded to make a most eloquent address, accounting his services in behalf of his adopted country as a reason why his sentence should be light." Unfortunately this is the only point in his harangue that has been given to the world as yet; but it is sufficient to show that, instead of securing a mitigation of his punishment, the elequence of O'Neil ought to have prompted the judge to lay on the scourge with a heavy hand. A more brazen and bare-faced, a more impudent and imprudent appeal for mercy was never uttered in a court of justice. If faithful service in the loyal army during the Rebellion is to be taken as an extenuation of such reckless and high-handed outrages as these Fenian raids upon the territory of a neighboring country, what is to become of us, and how long shall we be suffered to remain at

But it is scarcely worth one's while to contemplate the gloomy possibilities in store for us, since O'Neil's eloquence proved as abortive as his attempt at sanguinary deeds. He has a fine of $10 to pay, and a general asseasment of half a mill per capita on the chambermaids and kitchen girls of Hibernian descent and Fenian proclivities will suffice to raise the money. The two years' confinement in Windsor jail, however, is another matter, in which the sympathy of kitchen girls and chambermaids will not avail. From this part of O'Neil's sentence there can be no relief, except at the hands of the President. That he will be badgered and bothered to let O'Neil loose there is no doubt. Strenuous efforts have already been made to secure the pardon of the Fenians who were convicted and sentenced to imprisonment recently at Canandaigua, New York, and the effort will be repeated in O'Neil's case with even greater persistency. But we trust that President Grant will prove as proof against the eloquence of O'Neil's friends as did the Windsor judge against the eloquence of O'Neil himself, and that the valiant hero of many an unfought battle will be suffered to remain in durance vile until his allotted time is up. Twenty years would have been more in accordance with the demands of justice, but two years' residence in free and contracted quarters will probably suffice to put a little sense into O'Neil's head, and cause him to emerge from his cell in 1872 a wiser as well as a sadder man, and a less ferocious Fenian than he has been in the past.

FINANCE AND COMMERCE.

EVENING TELEGRAPH OFFICE, Monday, Aug. 1, 1870.

The week opens on a quiet and rather easier money market though the rates continue at last week's figures, lenders being unanimous in anticipating an active market towards the middle or close of the present month, and are therefore anxious to keep their funds well under control for any emergency. We quote call loans at 5@6 per cent. and first-class business paper at 6@8 per cent., the lower figure is limited to transactions at bank in favor of good customers on short date. The Treasury programme for August com-prises sales of $5,000,000 of gold and the purchase of $6,000,000 in Government bonds.

Gold opened at 121, declined to 120%, but advancing again, closed at 121%, an advance of $6 on closing prices of Saturday.

Government boads are quiet at about Saturday's quotations. We have no prices from New York this morning, the board being closed out of respect for the memory of the late Mr.

Nathan, recently murdered, and whose funeral takes place to-day.

There was a very trifling business transacted at the Stock Board to-day, the only sales being the following:—City Sixes, new, at 100%; Lehigh gold loan at 80; Reading Railroad at 48%; Camben and Amboy at 114%, and Pennsylvania
