

NEW YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent. NEW YORK, Aug. 9, 1870. A Yachting Fragment.

Your yachting reporter, who loves his business and has served long in it, is very refreshing. It is almost as good as going a-yachting to listen to him. I might mention at least one who, as a representative of his profession, is unequalled in the gift of gab. His conversation is a monologue. He is quite as good—and undourable after the first quarter of an hour—as Coleridge, prince of talkers, must have been. I admit that I said he was refreshing, but that is upon condition that you do not yield yourself up to him for more than a quarter of an hour at a time. If you yield yourself for a greater length of time than that you become demoralized into a victim, and there is no luck in you. Previous to the race it was my luck to be conversationally crucified by one of the most accomplished yacht reporters in the profession. For the first quarter of an hour the sensation was new and pleasant. After that time it began to resemble the process of impalement. I moved my body, worked my features, and tried to relieve myself with an intellectual, moral, and physical wriggle. It was all of no use. The yacht reporter had found a hearer who knew no more about yachts than an oyster does of the tree he is figuratively said to climb, and was determined not to let him off until he had made of him a wiser man. It was quite unnecessary for me to say a word—that was a blessing—for all your first-class yacht reporter asks is that you will give your tongue rest and pay attention, or seem to pay attention, while he works his. I came from that interview bearing with me an indefinite impression that the chief end of man was to go yachting around the globe and have the results perpetually printed in the morning papers. This impression was not altogether unconfirmed by the general contemplation of humanity in New York during the whole of yesterday. Perhaps it is good for the health of society that these sensational breezes should sweep over it once in a while. Between the yacht race, and the murder of Mr. Nathan, and the war news from Europe, and the latest arrest of Lydia Thompson in Chicago, the moral health of the public is abundantly taken care of.

The Nathan Murder and the New York. Seldom in New York has there been committed a murder of which the investigation, by detectives and reporters, has been so extremely bungling and dissatisfactory. Eleven days have now elapsed since Mr. Nathan was murdered, and unless the vague rumor, which is at the present moment spreading through the city, and which declares the murderer to be discovered, be correct, no perceptible progress has been made toward the clearing up of the mystery. The failure to identify the criminal affords a pleasant prospect to timid and nervous residents, does it not? The house occupied by the Nathans is more conspicuous than most houses that are quite as palace-like in construction. It is one of the places that would be least likely to be pointed out as dangerous. Its public and well-protected locality is one of its chief protections. The many lights from the Fifth Avenue Hotel and the gas lights from the Fifth Avenue Hotel side of the street shine full upon it. Very near to it foot passengers and car and stage passengers continue to travel until a late hour in the night. If a man could hope to live safe anywhere it would be in precisely such a house and such a locality as the Nathan mansion, near the intersection of Twenty-third street and Fifth avenue. And yet the genial, generous, and noble-hearted owner of that residence is stricken down in it by unknown hands, and his gray head, during "the dead waste and middle of the night," beaten into a mesh of blood, bones, and pulp. This rather detracts from the feeling of security one ought to enjoy in one's own house.

In such cases as that of Mr. Nathan it is very hard to repress a feeling of disgust at what appears to be the imbecility of the police. Whether this feeling be fair or not, I do not pretend to be able to say, but I know that it has been encouraged by the highly wrought and conflicting accounts prepared by the reporters, and the do-work very hard, and they are entitled to credit for bringing to light a vast number of facts which it is of material importance for the public to be made acquainted with, and which, but for them, would never come to public knowledge. But at the same time sensation is bread and meat to them, and they possess a wonderful genius for leavening a large quantity of fancy with an infinitely small quantity of truth. Having been amongst them I know what they are—how self-sacrificing, how patient, how persevering, how unremitting in their toil. But they also understand stage effect, and I know how willfully they pervert their imaginations when the question of stage effect comes in. Bean Brummell, after spilling a dozen neckhandkerchiefs, could smile complacently upon elaborating a smooth howl from the thirteenth. "At last!" his valet would exclaim, gathering up the remains, "we have achieved a success." It is so with the New York police reporter. He would gladly spill a dozen reports daily for the sake of daily "making a sensation with the thirteenth."

Left in Pawn. French fathers sometimes do strange things. A little while ago one of them called upon the Baron von Schleicher, interpreter to the Second District Police Court, and requested an immediate interview upon a matter of importance. The interview was granted, and the Frenchman, whose name is Maniero, told a very singular story. He said that four months ago he borrowed twenty-five dollars from one M. le Brun, and left as security therefor his little daughter, six years of age. With the twenty-five dollars thus obtained he went to Poughkeepsie and procured work there. He lately returned to this city, and calling upon Mrs. le Brun, asked for his child, expecting of course that it would immediately be delivered up to him. To his astonishment Mrs. le Brun informed him that she had no intention of delivering up the child, as she had become attached to it. I have heard of pawnbrokers who refused to part with pledges that were left with them, but never under such circumstances as those I have heard of a distinguished actor placing himself in pawn in order to procure the wherewithal to purchase whisky, but the story which mentioned this pleasing little incident did not relate that she found any difficulty in getting herself out of pawn again upon returning the amount of money borrowed. Mr. Maniero's case is an exceptional one, and when knowledge of what legal disposition was made of it comes to my ears, I will endeavor to impart that knowledge to you.

A CARD. A CAPTIVE PARTY LEFT IN THE LURCH.—A party of gentlemen consisting of Postmaster Tomlinson, Captain J. A. Parvin, John Gooley, Robert Lafferty (others), sugar refiners of Gloucester, and fifteen others, chartered a vessel from Capt. Peter Paynter, which boat sailed down the broad bosom of the Delaware under the command of Mr. Michael English. The happy company arrived in due time at the Capes, where they went ashore, some hoping to meet their families. In this they were not disappointed, but judge of their disappointment when, on returning to their craft to change their clothing to appear in proper costume in the hotel drawing-room, the gallant Captain English and his "mysterious low black schooner" had disappeared. Moral:—When a party next visits the Capes, let them have a "boat of their own," but put no trust in gallant Mike English's "low black schooner."

LABOR.—Labor is capital. Bestow good health upon a man, so that he can labor every six out of seven days, and no matter how poor he may have been at the commencement of life's great race, he will be certain to accumulate a fortune, provided he takes care of his earnings. PLANTATION BITTERS is certain to make the weak ones strong, and to preserve the health of the healthy. From four to six hours is considered the ordinary limit for brain work. At the expiration of this time the phosphorus is carried off, and the man becomes irritable and nervous. If he is poor, and continues on at his task, as most of poor doctors, lawyers, and editors do, he will be certain to shorten his days and fill an untimely grave, as did Sir Walter Scott, unless he uses Plantation Bitters, which speedily restores his vital energy, repairs his indigestion, and corrects the sluggish circulation of his blood.

THE ORDER OF THE DAY.—A general order for Sodomized. In the teeth of ALL OPPOSITION it has become the supreme detritment of the age. No impurity can infect the teeth cleaned daily with Sodomized. Quillay, the bark of the Chilean Soap Tree, an article which possesses cleansing properties superior to those of any other known substance, is one of the ingredients of this peerless compound. Sodomized is the only detritment in existence in which this salubrious botanical product is incorporated.
