THE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN.

THE address of the Republican Congressiona Committee which has undertaken the management of the national campaign embraces an eloquent review of the past career of the Republican party and a flattering statement of the achievements of the present administration and the present Congress in reducing the debt and diminishing taxation. Despite these merits, however, we very much whether it will prove an effective campaign document. It has none of the stirring invocations by which political legions are usually marshalled to victory. It dwells upon the past achievements of the party without presenting any well-defined platform upon which it is to be rallied hereafter: and it contains some sentences which indicate that its author felt that Republicanism had been forced into a defensive attitude instead of being able to maintain the aggressive with the zeal of its more vigorous days. The address asks Republicans who are presumably "tired of the responsibilities of power," and ready "to relinquish it to other hands," to remember "that there are none worthy to accept it." This assertion may be true, but even if it is, the leader of a campaign ought to have been able to invent many better reasons for recalling deserters to their allegiance, and to disdain a resort to such a paltry appeal, for independent men will not be 'slow in coming the conclusion that, if neither the present parties is worthy of public confidence, it is high time that they should be at work organizing a new one. The address also tells us that the "high-raised expectations formed of Grant's administration have not been fully realized in the action of either the President or of Congress." This may be another truism, but we cannot see the wisdom of enunciating it to the world in a Republican campaign document, and, like the admission in the last paragraph of the address, that the record of the Republican party is "not faultless," its promulgation might have been left to the Democratic agitators. who will be sure to attend to their part of the coming fight.

In all their successful campaigns the Republicans have uniformly inscribed aggressive and well-defined mottoes upon their banners. They have told the people what they meant to do, and despite the noisy clamor of their foes they have secured the triumph of bold and progressive ideas. It remains to be seen what will be the result of an experiment which bases appeals for popular support rather on the soundness of an old record than on the welldefined assurance of future usefulness. Experience indicates that in this country no party can live long on old glories. Lave Americans speedily learn to ignore dead issues, and to act for the future rather than the past. If the Republican party is to maintain power it must keep fully up with the times, and, purging itself of corruption, carve out a career of usefulness adapted to the changed needs and condition of the country.

THE INDIANS.

At the opening of the summer season all the indications were in favor of a more than usually troublesome Indian war upon the plains, and it is a matter for surprise as well as congratulation that thus far the savages have, on the whole, shown a disposition to conduct themselves in a peaceable manner. The annual contests with the Indians are enormously expensive and are unproductive of any results that will at all compensate for the outlay which the Government is compelled to make for the sake of fighting them. So long as hostile relations are maintained between the red men and their white neighbors there will be a never-ending labor before the army, for after a whole season has been passed in hunting down the Indians and driving them upon reservations, nothing is gained, except the privilege of feeding them through the winter, and then fighting them again so soon as the warm weather sets in and the grass begins to grow upon the prairies. Unless some other peace-makers than the sword and the bullet can be found, there is no other solution of the Indian problem to be looked forward to than the extermination of the red race after long years of bloodshed and outrage. That it is the duty of the people of the United States to prevent any such result as this needs no argument, and while the murderous propensities of the savages must be restrained even at the cost of extermination, it will be more to our credit as a civilized and Christian people, and very much less expensive from a mere pecuniary point of view, if we can contrive to transform the red men into steady, law-abiding citizens, There are elements in the Indian character that if properly cultivated would make them valuable members of a civilized society, and that they can be made to appreciate the benefits of civilization has been shown in the case of the Choctaws and others.

The greatest occasion for trouble with the Indians that the Government has to deal with is that almost their entire acquaintance with the white race is limited to a frontier populatation, most of the members of which are scarcely less savage than themselves. It is practically impossible for the Government to supervise every square mile of our immense Western territory; and when white men think they can make anything by trespassing upon the lands reserved for the Indians, there is no means of preventing them from doing so, and such trespasses are, of course, naturally resented by the savages. Nor can the whites altogether be blamed in the matter, for, according to their view of the case-the view that must prevail in the endthe country ought to be improved and cultivated. The only way, therefore, to solve the Indian problem in such a manner as will be creditable to the nation is to encourage the red men to give up their nomadic mode of life, and to labor for their victuals and clothing by cultivating the ground and practising the arts of civilization. It may require much patient labor to do this, but it surely can be done if the work is entered upon with energy; and if a tenth part of the money, talent, and ability that are expended in very fruitless efforts to Christianize the heathen in Africa and China were bestowed upon the Indians, the results would in all probability be more satisfactory and much more creditable to the practical Christianity and philanthropy of the nation.

The good effect of bringing the Indians in contact with the best culture of the country has been shown in the case of the old chief Red Cloud, who has labored zealously since his return to the plains to preserve peace between his people and the whites. This chief, when he was in the East, impressed every one favorably by his dignified and independent bearing, and by the eloquent and straightforward manner in which he stated the cause of his race. For years he was considered one of the most treacherous and dangerous of savage leaders, and those who professed to know him, and to understand the Indian character, were eager in prophesying that he would start upon the war path as soon as he arrived upon the plains again. Not only has he given the lie to this prediction, but he has proved himself to be a man of honor and integrity, whose example some of his white neighbors might imitate with advantage, and it is probably due to him that we have been spared a bloody and expensive Indian war on the frontier during the present summer. If such a supposed incorrigible as Red Cloud could be so impressed with the benefits of civilization by a short visit to the Eastern States, what might not an earnest effort on FOR REGISTER OF WILLS, the part of the Christian philanthrophy of the country to improve the condition of the Indian accomplish?

THE HOUSE OF ORLEANS.

WE publish elsewhere a comprehensive sketch of the members of the family of Orleans, who are making desperate efforts to regain power in France. If they were not. as has been charged, the prime movers in the intrigue which made Leopold a candidate for the Spanish throne and thus precipitated the present war, they are at least endeavoring to improve to the utmost the chances opened by the present conflict for their restoration. We are told that they lavish their money like water in relieving the sufferings of wounded French soldiers, they are asking permission to return to their native country to enter her military and naval service, and their political friends are constantly endeavoring to advance their dynastic interests. If Napoleon is thrown overboard, the great question will arise whether a Republic or an Orleanist king shall succeed him, and the chances seem to be nearly evenly balanced between these alternatives. A provisional government may bridge over an interregnum preparatory to a final decision, but before the Republicans surrender another opportunity to establish their cherished system, a thrilling episode in French history may be fairly anticipated.

THE ACTION of the French Chambers yesterday proves the determination of that body to do all in its power to check the progress of the Germans and to drive them back from the soil of France. Imitating our example, specie payments have been suspended and the notes of the Bank of France made a legal tender, so that henceforth abundant means for equipping and feeding French armies are secured, while the new levy providing for a general armament will place in the field a mighty host of French soldiers. The great question remains, however, whether these preparations are not too late. They should have been made at least a month ago, and the precious time already wasted has given a fearful if not a decisive advantage to the invaders.

OBITUARY. Commodore Junius J. Boyle. Commodore Junius J. Boyle, United States Navy, iled yesterday at the Navy Yard, Norfolk, Va. He was born in Maryland, and was appointed as a midshipman for the District of Columbia on the 27th of August, 1823. He made his first cruise in the sloop Peacock, attached to the Pacific squadron, in 1827. On the 21st of March, 1829, he was promoted to passed midshipman, and in 1830 he was attached to the Mediterranean Squadron. His commission as lieutenant was dated June 21st, 1832, and from 1834 to 1836 he served on the frigate Delaware in the Mediterranean. In 1848 he again visited the Mediterranean in the frigate Congress. During 1845 and 1846 he was naval storekeeper at Port Mahon, and in was attached to the schooner Bonito, in the home squadron. From 1851 to 1855 he was on duty on the storeship Southampton. He was placed on the retired list on the 19th of September, 1855, while still a lieutenant. His commission as commander was dated July 16, 1862.

FINANCE AND COMMERCE.

RVZNING TRIMGRAPH OFFICE,
Friday, Aug. 12, 1870.

The money market shows a little more activity to-day, but borrowers on call obtain all they want at 5@6 per cent. Commercial paper is quiet at 6@8 per cent., as heretofore, but only first-class paper of short date is taken at this range. The chief interest is concentrated in gold, and the course of the premium seems to be "up or down" according to the Prussian chances of victory or defeat. Under these circumstances the market is necessarily unsteady. Gold remains active and somewhat stronger with sales ranging from 1171/20117%, closing at 1/6. Government bonds are quiet and steady at about last night's figures.

Local stocks were dull but fairly steady.

Sales of State 6s, third series, at 111. City 6s quiet but firm. No sales.

Reading Railroad sold sluggishly at 48@48%. b. o.; Pennsylvania sold at 58%; Lehigh Val-ley at 71%; 44% was offered for Oil Creek and

In Canal shares there was some attraction in Lehigh, which sold at 34@34¼—the latter price b. o.: 17 was bid for Schuyikill preferred. Coal, Bank, and Passenger Railway stocks were steady but without sales, PHILADELPHIA STOCK EXCHANGE SALES.
