CAPTURING PARIS.

How To Go About It, According to a Prossian Office.

A lieutenant-colonel of the Prussian staff says that three armies are in full march on Paris, by way of the Mosel'e, of the Vosges, and of Belfort. The Garman strategist brings these armies, badly cut up but still very strong, to our very walls. They mean to find their way in at all hazards. But Paris is a vast intrenched camp; it is not an ordinary strong place, it is defended by half a million of men and protected by an enceinte of twenty-eight kilometres (17) miles) in circumference, strengthened with ninety-three bastions and fortified thoroughly. These walls are still further protected by fifteen detached forts provided with seven great external works, whose fires cross and form a second enciente, whose guns can crush everything around them. Paris is further guarded by the Seine, the Marne, and with an internal circular rallway. Such a place cannot be invested in the regular way; it must be assalled at some vulnerable point. Now, which is the vulnerable point? The eastern forts, Romainville, Noesy, Rosny, Nogent, Vincennes, are advantageously on a plateau covered by the Marne, and they form such a strong line that our Prussian admits it would be imprudent to attack on that side. Then, again, it wouldn't do to attack by Charenton, for after earrying that place they must cross the fires of Vincennes, lvry, and the ramparts. On the southwest the attack would be against Charenton, Ivry, and the Bicetre-decidedly unadvisable. Then the southern forts, Montrouge, Vannes, and Issy, on the steep heights between Sceaux and Versailles, are very impracticable. Mont Valerien is the only work on the west; but then Paris is behind the Leine, which makes a double curve. The banks here are hilly and covered with wood, furnishing abundant shelter to the defenders. The besiegers, then, are limited to St. Denis. The Prussian colonel says:-

"The points of attack are naturally on the north and northeast. They are the weak sides; the castern fronts are partly covered by the Marne; the south and west are strong, and their attack might compromise the besiegers line of retreat. On the north the Paris and Strasburg Railway would serve for transport from the Rhine. Admitting that the Prassian port from the Rhine. Admitting that the Prussian army must be stronger than the French army, and that the French in the field, being kept at a distance, that the French in the field, being kept at a distance, cannot annoy the besirging force, St. Denis should be the first point of attack. He might then advance on Montmartre without the risk of a flanking fire from the forts. We should attack simultaneously the three forts of St. Denis and that of Aubervilliers, and then make a feint on the east. The slege would resemble that of Sebastopol. St. Denis is on the right bank of the Seine, which leaves a tongue of land that must be selzed by the besleging force. The beslegars will then observe the citadel of Mont Vabesiegers will then observe the citadel of Mont Va-lerien; they will cut railways on the left bank of the Seine, and throw a bridge across to communicate with the troops on the right bank."

To accomplish this the Prussian officer's arrangements are to set 50,000 men against the three forts of St. Denis and on the tongue of land between St. Denis and Mont Valerien, 20,000 on the north of St. Denis, 20,000 more in front of Aubervilliers; and all these, covered by the forest of Bondy and other points of resist ance in that direction, could maintain themselves against any force sent to dislodge them. Thirty thousand at Neullly could operate against the Rosny fort, but their main use would be to secure the line of retreat. Place before St. Denis 50,000, north of St. Denis 20,000, in the forest of Bondy 30,000, at Bouyet 20,000, at Neuilly 30,000, between Neuilly and Villeneuve 30,000-total, 180,000, which would form the siege. This plan was promulgated some seven or eight years ago, Prussia with two other armies, one of 120,000 (the army of the Upper Rhine), and one to enter France via Switzerland, 100,000 strong, and even then, says its

"A defeat of the besiegers might attain the most disastrous proportions, if the population should take an active part in the war, and should join the garrison in cutting off the convoys of the invading

How the Allies Went About it in 1814. Paris was entered by the allies in April, 1814. On the 30th of March, when they were at Meaux King Joseph issued a proclamation to the people of Paris, in which he said:

"Citizens:

"Let this vast city become a camp for some moments, and let the enemy find their disgrace under its walls, which they hope to break through in triumph."

The following day Paris capitulated, and the two army corps-regular troops-which it con-tained agreed to march out of it on the same day, "commending the capital to the generosity of the allied powers."

It was only on the evening previous to this unconditional surrender that the Duke of Treviso wrote to Prince Schwarzenberg. "Under the walls of Paris." "We are determined to defend ourselves to the last extremity."

THE HORRORS OF BATTLE.

A Citizen on the Field of Woerth-An Eloquent Portrayal of Human Suffering. The correspondent of the London Telegraph, writing from Saverne, August 11, says:made on the battle-field of Woerth. They are eloquent in their brief intensity, and they will afford you more varied observations than could be comprised in a more formal description. As to this you can judge for yourself :-

"Sunday-A rush pell mell of about two thousand "Sunday—A rush pell mell of about two thousand French soldiers, who are running to take refuge in Strasburg. Heroes yesterday, fugitives to-day. Heroes again to-morrow, when they will have seen the standard again and eaten their soup. Sixty peasants' carts required to remove the wounded from the field of battle. In the evening, at Bruckmuhl, a lot of Prussian corpses: a pastor and a Catholic priest. A soldier is struck by his officer because he moved a corpse with his foot. Two hundred wounded men are in the mill. Night—Groaning and treatment of the wounded. Lanterns of marauders in the distance, on the field of battle. An officer of zouaves, his two arms taken off, wouunded in the neck near his two arms taken off, wounded in the neck near the dorsal vertebra. An officer of Wurtemberg, M. von Elberfeld; ball in the loins; his torments ago-nizing to see. What of his wife and children? "Dupont, a Paristan, wounded in the thigh-bone,

"Monday morning—Visit to Spachbach. Ambulance in the church. Field of battle circumscribed by Elsasshausen, Froschweiler, Woerth, Reishoffen, Spachbach, Gonstett, and Morsbronn. An irregular semicircle, of which the centre is Reishoffen. In the valley of Woerth all the dend are Prussians. On the heights of Froschweiler there are headlerness. heights of Froschweilier there are hecatombs of French of all arms. The cuirassiers lie in the hop gardens. "The heaps of men, of horses, and of knapsacks, seen from a certain distance, resemble flocks of sheep resting on the rise of a hill. At Morsbronn were seen the Prince Frederick Charles and the were seen the Frince Frederick Charles and the Duke of Saxe Coburg Gotha. The wounded French and Prussians are treated precisely on the same footing. There is, however, a sensible difference between the merals of the wounded victors and the wounded vanquished. Prussian officers console their men by telling them of the taking of Strasburg, which is not taken.

"At Froschweiler the," Chateau Durckheim has been transformed into an hotel. There remain traces of an obstinate struggle. Our soiders have fought bravely. As far as Elsasshausen the ground is interally paved with shot. We are told by the Prussians that they have shot fifteen marauding and the 9th culrassiers are not entirely destroyed, there can only remain a small fragment of them. Poor men! Brave men!

"The church at Froschweiler burnt down. I saw the body of a French surgeon on a litter, his kept lying on his breast. Twenty-five others are prisoners, because they have contemptational Society. They wear the badge of the International Society. They appear to be more wearled and sulky than despairing; they are occupied with the care of the wounded.

"Having quitted the Frussian lines on the lith August, we arrive at Blisch. If we were well received by our enemies, we also met with ample haspitality from our countrymen. A military captain named Landre, with carpet slippers, byt sabre, and umbrella, did not know what to make of us. At 10 o'clock at night, in the midst of drenching rain, he orders us to hoist our knapsacks or our backs and accompany him to the fort. There we wait for two hours. I sleep standing, while they open a hundred doors and raise a hundred portcallises and lower a drawbridge to awake the commandant of the place. The commandant, who is a man of sense, simply wishes as 'Good night,' and requests that he may not be again disturbed without cause, "A victory at the Bitsch post-house over two Bavarian soldiers who were driving a cart. Instead of advancing when called upon, they drew their swords, and one of them received a ball in his arm. He was silenced, but the other gave vent to loud cries, as he was afraid of being shot."
