THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1870.

The earliest regular edition of THE EVENING TELEGRAPH goes to press at 11 o'clock, and the subsequent regular editions at 21, 31, and 41. Whenever there is important news of the progress of the European war, extra editions will be issued after this hour, and before the regular time for the early edition.

FRANCE, SPAIN, AND ITALY. It is a significant circumstance that the immediate and tangible results of the war in Europe have been favorable to the cause of liberty. Some of the American soldiers have cherished the hope that the battles of the Old World will lead through sore trials and tribulations to results analogous to those attained here, and that John Brown's soul will go marching on on the other side of the Atlantic since its mission in the United States has been accomplished; and there is now a fair prospect that this hope will be realized. Republicanism in Spain has been greatly strengthened by the course of events. The leading question in that country is no longer what prince shall be placed upon her throne, but what is the best method of changing her constitution so that all dynasties may be debarred from the succession. The republican system, which was formally and apparently finally condemned by the Cortes, is in a fair way to receive a rehearing, with a good prospect of adoption as the permanent form of government in Spain.

From Italy comes the intelligence that national troops have at last occupied the Papal territory, and that the nation is rejoicing over "the deliverance of the Roman provinces from the tyranny and impoverishing rule of the Papal Government." After years of agitation, remonstrance, and revolution had failed to accomplish this object, it is achieved now without any opposition more serious than slight skirmishes and ineffectual diplomatic protests. Napoleon was long the firm prop of the temporal power of the Pope, and in withdrawing his troops from Rome to facilitate his preparations for the war with Prussia, he opened the way for the completion of Italian unity. As the temporal government of the Papal States was about the worst that the world has ever seen in any age or country, its downfall is a good cause of rejoicing among all the lovers of liberal institutions; and this event would of itself go far to compensate for many of the miseries of the war which gave to Victor Emanuel the opportunity he had been eagerly awaiting.

France, too, instead of being compelled to postpone until the death of the Emperor another republican experiment, regains her domestic freedom under the most unexpected circumstances. She has not only got rid of her Bonapartes, but they have so deeply disgraced themselves in the eyes of the whole nation that their hold on popular confidence bas been totally destroyed; and if Prussia attempts to put them back, they will be as contemptuously rejected as were the Bourbons.

Thus from the carnage of bloody battlefields results wonderfully favorable to freedom have been wrought out in France, Spain, and Italy. Practically Napoleon was the common tyrant of all these countries, and his sudden downfall has led to their common deliverance. Germany, instead of lamenting or striving to undo this work, should be proud of it. Whatever view her kings and princes may take of these extraordinary complications, her people should rejoice that their valor has promoted not only their own safety and unity but the substantial welfare of other members of the great European family. In spite of the machinations of ambitious monarchs, the war is turning out to be a real war of freedom; and if those who have now the power to settle the final terms of adjustment do not willingly recognize this fact, a prolongation of the struggle may make it painfully clear to their understanding.

OUR PRIDE IN OUR PARK. PHILADELPHIA may proudly boast of her park. It is a genuine republican luxury, a public thing ready for everybody and within reach of everybody. The park is a triumph! It brings the country into the city; it brings the verdure and the quiet of the fields, the stillness and shadows of the forest, close to the noisy streets, thronged with dusty, worn, and jaded multitudes. Here is no deceptionhere is the veritable thing! The oak tree spreads as broadly as on the mountain-top, and the grass is as green as in the far-off memories of distant travel.

Public works are proverbially tasteless, but we can proudly point to our park in all its simple loveliness. Nature has been very kind to us: a beautiful river winds placidly between lovely banks, but mankind is so inimical to nature that we may justly boast of having done nothing to spoil the native graces of the scene. The ground rises and falls throughout the whole extent in such ceaseless undulations, that the old prosaic name of Fair-mount is literally true of every part of the vast area, and a true taste has left the natural beauty uninjured by the hand of man. Not a single glimpse have we of that half-educated taste that is always tawlry: not a nook or corner recalls the fine arts of the fancy fair, with its pincushions and patchwork. Nature is never marred by the obtrusiveness of the architect, and the smooth road uprolls through dell and over hillock with a simplicity and grace that never suggest the plummet and line of the engineerand this is our triumph! Nothing can exceed this, for it is the highest art to conceal art, and it is the truest taste that never defaces nature, but only serves to bring its loveliness into relief.

Thus far nothing has been spoiled. The thickets still give little glimpses of wilderness as wild as a mountain fastness, while steep descents robed in their native verdure draw the eye to follow the abrupt decline, or the vision climbs with gladness from branch to branch of the ancient trees boasting of their centuries of growth. Eager tourists dare days of toil for scenery no fairer than that so close to our own doors, and the sun sets as gloriously and the moonlight rests as softly on the banks of the Schuylkill or the fair sides of George's Hill as on many a noted spot only to be reached by days of laborious travel.

In these times of extravagance and haste it takes a moral resolution to catch a moment of healthful leisure, and an effort of Spartan courage to enjoy a simple relaxation. Newport or the White Mountains, Duluth or Paris, is "the thing to see;" everybody "does them" as a duty, or expects to do them some day, but the domestic, quiet pleasure trip of a few hours is too often neglected as a thing of naught.

THE REDUCTION OF NAVAL EX-PENSES.

No PLEA for economy should induce the Government to discharge from the army or navy any officers in good standing or to reduce any from higher to lower grades. The great superiority of our military over our civil service is due to the assurance that is held out to those who enter it that they will be permanently retained, if they so desire, during life or good behavior, with chances of promotion from the lower to the higher grades, as their merits may deserve or the exigencies of the service permit. It is due to the tax-payers of the country, however, that hosts of unemployed officers should not be retained upon the pay-rolls of either the army or navy in times of profound peace, if it can be prevented; and as officers who have been regularly commissioned cannot with propriety be discharged, the retiring law should be rigorously enforced in letter and spirit. The number of the higher grades should be reduced by prohibiting promotions, and new officers should not be admitted except on a system that will prevent the service from being overcrowded. The evil of a superabundance of officers is more severely felt in the navy than in the army, and there now exists in that branch of the military service a state of affairs that calls for some decided action on the part of Con-

There are now in the navy, provided the promotions caused by the death of Admiral Farragut are confirmed by the Senate, 1 admiral, 1 vice-admiral, 36 rear-admirals, 80 commodores, 75 captains, 105 commanders, and 185 lieutenant-commanders, or a total of 483 officers entitled to command fleets and vessels, for a force of about eight thousand men. In the army the officers of corresponding grades only number about 225 for a force of 50,000 men. In the navy there is one commanding officer to every sixteen men, and in the army one to every 227 men, a disproportion that is out of all reason, even admitting the differences of the two branches of the service by which a certain number of men in the navy represents a larger force than it does in the army.

If there was ample employment for all these gentlemen there would be no cause for complaint, but there are many more officers than are wanted to maintain the navy at the highest state of efficiency desirable, and it is a notorious fact that it is next to impossible for the Secretary to find employment for a majority of them. Under the present law of Congress the officers of the navy are retired in regular routine when they arrive at a certain age, and are entitled for the balance of their lives to one-half of the highest sea pay of the grade of retirement. Under this arrangement there will be thirty-six rear-admirals retired between the present time and January 1st, 1880; add these to the twentyone now on the retired list, and there will be fifty-seven, and if we allow 33 per cent. for deaths, then there will still remain the end of the present decade retired rear-admirals drawing $3000 each per annum, or imposing upon the Government an annual expense of $111,000. By the same calculation there will be on the first of January, 1880, 75 commodores, who will collectively draw $192,500 per annum from the treasury. Thus the Government will be at an annual expense of $303,000 for the support of two grades alone of retired naval officers who are not expected to perform duty except under extraordinary circumstances, and who if ordered upon duty will be paid double the amount of their retiring salary.

It is no injustice to the many worthy naval officers who, under existing arrangements, will be retired as rear-admirals and commodores during the next ten years, to say that this is a burden the tax-payers of the meadow that steals so freshly through the country ought not to be expected to bear. A partial reform can be effected now by abolishing the grade of admiral, which the death of Admiral Farragut has made vacant; that of vice-admiral when it shall be vacated by the death or resignation of its present occupant, and by prohibiting any more promotions to the grades of rear-admiral, commodore, and captain until the number of officers in those grades shall be very much reduced below what it is at present. In this way injustice will be done to no one, while a very large sum of money will be saved and the efficiency of the navy in no wise impaired. As a matter of course the officers of the navy are solicitous to have the present state of affairs maintained without change, but it is the duty of Congress to consult the interests of the country rather than those of individuals, and if the expenses of the navy are cut down in the manner we have indicated no one will have a legitimate cause for complaint.

RNGLISH SELFISHNESS.

ENGLAND has lost the respect and affection of both France and Prussia by her course during the present war, and isolated herself more completely than ever from continental sympathy. She mortally offended Germany by furnishing to the empire coal to speed its fleets on their devastating errand and arms to kill the soldiers of the Fatherland. Now, since a republic has been proclaimed, the British Government is supposed to be strongly influenced by Queen Victoria's desire to protect her royal relatives in Europe from the danger of dethronement, and there has been a total want of zeal in the English efforts to bring about an armistice. The English press continues to advocate the restoration of the Orleans dynasty, to speak sneeringly of the new French administration, and to urge under the guise of friendship, that concessions even greater than those which Prussia is disposed to demand should be granted. The practical effect of this conduct, and of varied acts of treachery and hostility, has been to arouse in France a deep feeling of resentment which her statesmen would gladly gratify at the first opportunity. Already the hint is thrown out that the sympathy evinced by Ireland for France in the midst of all her troubles will soon be fully reciprocated, and that when the hour of reckoning comes the Emerald Isle will at last find an ally faithful and powerful enough to secure her freedom. With Germany indignant, France irate, Ireland rebellious, and America unforgetful of the Alabama, Great Britain has foes in every quarter and friends

Street, is probably the largest in the United States.
Five stories in height, it runs through from Front to Dock street, a distance, we may say, of 215 feet.
And this huge building is filled from cellar to attle with the very rarest and purest brands of whiskies.
The seeker after the genuine article can find Bourbon of old date, wheat ditto, and that champion of all whiskies, the Golden Wedding. It is sufficient to note here that Mr. Daly's stock embraces the productions of the celebrated distilleries belonging to Thomas Moore & Son, Joseph S. Finch & Co., and Thomas Moore. Their whiskies are proposed from the best grains, double copper distilled and put up in seasoned, heavily-charred, fron-bound barreis.
As agent, therefore, of these well-known firms, Mr.
Daly justive claims that he can supply the trade with the finest whisky in the market, and in the original packages as received direct from the manufacturers.
This he will vouch for, and this is a point which deserves the notices of all purchasers.
