BETHESDA CHURCH.

The Opening of the New Bethesda Presbyterian Church, Kensington—Particulars of the Building—Its History.

The new building of the Bethesda Presbyterian Church, just completed, situated at the southeast corner of Frankford road and Vienna street, will be opened for public service for the first time on next Sunday morning, the 35th instant. The building is one of the largest and most handsome in that section of the city, and the congregation worshipping in it is in a most flourishing condition.

The church is under the pastoral care of the Rev. W. T. Eva. The efforts of this reverend gentieman in the building up of this new enterprise have been in every way successful, as the now completed house of worship testifies. He was formerly in charge of the First Kensington Presbyterian Church, on Girard avenue, known as Chandler's Church, from its first minister, and while there was also very successful. On December 4, 1867, the Bethesda congregation was formed as a colony from the first church, and this portion of the old body took with them the pastor. The corner-stone was laid on the first of July, 1868, and by May, 1869, the work was so far completed as to admit of the occupation of the lecture-room, which was dedicated on the eleventh day of that month. The work was then pushed forward and is now completed. The main audience room and the linished building will be formally dedicated with appropriate services on next Sunday.

The building is from designs by Addison Hutton, architect, and is built of hewn Trenton brownstone, in the Philadelphia Norman style. The dimensions outside are 110 by 64 feet. The ceiling of the andesce room is 35 feet high, and is in a sloping form, the highest portion holding the lighting apparatus of the church, which consists of three sets or rings of gas burners mounted in strong reflectors. The height of the basement ceiling is eleven feet.

The windows are of stained glass, inclusive of one very large one in the front of the church, and are from the manufactory of Brownholtz, Alcken & Ranson. Between the windows, and running to the ceiling, are large plaster ribs in the romanesque style. The galleries run around all four sides of the church, and the organ gallery is at the eastern end, immediately back of and over the pulpit. In this a goodly-sized instrument by H. Knauff & Son has been placed, which will be opened on Thursday evening next with a concert, in which Mr. Michael Cross, the organist of the Cathedral, and several well-known organist of the Cathedral, and several well-known

The pulpit desk is of solid polished white marble by Vanderhelt, and the pulpit platform is finished in solid walnut. The pulpit and other furniture is from the house of G. Sanderson, and the upholstering is by Wairaven. This last is in dark red for the main floor, while in the gallery the pews are fitted up in a lighter color, and with handsome oil cloth cushions capable of withstanding much hard wear.

The caracting from J. Ketchenwan is very pretty The carpeting, from J. Ketchenman, is very pretty and also substantial.

The main andience-room is reached by four wide flights of stairs to the sidewalk. The basement has an additional entrance to it and through it to the auditorium, which opens on Vienna street. Directly on the corners of the two streets is an unfinished tower, now run up to the top of the stone work and terminated with ornamental points, but which, when completed, will be continued into a spire altogether in the neighborhood of 180 feet high. The builder of the church was Mr. W. B. Ginnodo, and the painting and oiling was done by Joseph Hemp-

BOEHM.—Coroner Taylor this afternoon began an investigation into the case of George Boehm, who died on Friday of injuries alleged to have been received at the hands of George Blakeley, on Thursday morning last, at Baidwin's locomotive works. From the evidence, it appears that the deceased had been at work with the night gang in the steam hammering shop. The Weaver Homicide.

Court of Oyer and Terminer-Judges Allison and Ludlove. This morning the court resumed the trial of John Weaver, for the murder of his wife Fanny, at No. 1104 Parrish street, on the night of April 5 last. From the evidence it appears that on this night the prisoner and his wife, St. John Doris and his wife, and several other parties were in the kitchen of this house, carousing, and in the course of the evening a general fight took place, in which Mrs. Weave was beaten to death. The Coroner's physician, who made the post-mortem examination, described the corpse as covered with bruises, some recent and corpse as covered with bruises, some recent and some old, and said he found the sixth rib on the right side fractured at a point four inches from its anterior termination, and also the upper portion of the liver ruptured, near the fracture of the rib. These injuries were caused by violence, and death resulted from hemorrhage of the liver. There was no external mark of violence near these injuries.

SCANNEL AVENGED.

The Murder of Thomas Donahue, Under Ball to Appear for Trial for the Assassination of Florence Scannel John Scannel Accused.

Florence Scannel—John Scannel Accused.
Shortly after 11 o'clock last night, Thomas Donohue (who was accused before the Coroner of killing Florence Scannel, but who, after he had been declared guilty, was out on ball awaiting his trial), while walking along the Third avenue between Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets, with his two cousins, Dennis and Thomas Donohue, was met by a man who approached him with his head hanging down evidently to conceal his features. With a short start the man stopped in front of the party. Without a word he pointed a pistol to the breast of Thomas Donohue, and instantly fired. The report was distinctly heard at Twentieth street by the officer on duty.

The assailant, after shooting, turned around and ran rapidly along Seventeenth street, pursued by several citizens, but he disappeared in Irving place On his road he threw away an ordinary slouched hat, a gray spring overcoat, and a brown wig, all of which had evidently been used as a disguise. He was also seen to throw away a pistol, which was picked up by Mr. McDonald, of No. 152 Third avenue. The other articles were picked up by Sergeant Loonle, of East Twenty-second Street Police, who, while going his rounds, was talking to officer Bar-leigh on the Third avenue, about a block from the scene of murder, and who both hurried to the spot upon hearing the report of the pistol, and found Bonohue bleeding from the wound in his left breast.

DONOBUE RECOGNIZED HIS ASSASSIN. The Sergeant asked Donohue who had shot him. and the wounded man at once replied that it was John Scannell, and that he had recognized him in spite of his disguise. Donohue's companions also said that the murderer had run away along Seventeenth street. The Sergeant therefore went rapidly in that direction, and saw a carriage, in which were two persons, hurriedly driving away. Suspecting that the murderer might be in that vehicle, the Ser-geant overhauled it, but found that he was mistaken, and this delay gave the fleeing assassin a chance to escape. The Sergeant, having found the clothing before alluded to, then returned to the police station, Donohue having been borne by his friends to his residence at No. 348 East Eighteenth

THE NATURE OF THE WOUND. Dr. Kimbark having examined the wound pro-nounced it very serious. He could not positively assert that it was fatal, although the fact that the bullet was a very large one, that it made a jagged wound, and that it aid not bleed much externally, s almost conclusive evidence that it is mortal. SCANNBL'S HOUSE VISITED.

As Donohue has asserted positively that John Scannel had fired the fatal shot, a visit to the Glen-non House, Third avenue and Twenty-fourth street, formerly kept in part by John Scannel, was deemed necessary.

The person in this house said that John Scannel was at Copake, on the Harlem Railroad, and had been there for at least eight weeks. If, therefore, the assailant was John Scannel, he must have come to this city to shoot Donohue, as he had often threatened he would do on the first opportunity.

When John Scannel before attempted the life of Thomas Donohue, and was arrested, he was bound over in $1000 bonds to keep the peace toward Donohue and all other citizens for twelve months.—N. Y.

Both men were residents of Michigan Centre, Jackson county. Some three weeks ago they set out on a hunting and fishing tour. Hunting and fishing, they spent the time until last Saturday, when, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, as they were when, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, as they were seven miles off stony Point, bound across the lake, by some mismanagement, or from a sudden shift of the heavy wind which was blowing from the east, the boat was suddenly capsized. On first being thrown out the men clambered upon the side of the yacht, not at first regarding the affair in a serious light. But they soon found that the wind was strengthening, bringing up a rougher sea, which soon constantly broke over them. They made several attempts to right the craft, but the heavy sea, and the numbress which soon seized them, rendered and the numbress which soon seized them, rendered all their attempts unsuccessful.

After a time Turner became so weak and numb that, with Merritt's help, he lashed himself to tne boat, to prevent the seas washing him away. Merritt was holding a short oar or paddie when the accident occurred, and he now found that by using this he could keep his blood circulating, and prevent the helplessness which was so surely and steadily rendering Turner a dead man. All night long the mad, hungry waves beating over them, the wind howling a funeral dirge, the boat bounding and straining, the men clung to life, cheering each other howling a funeral dirge, the boat bounding and straining, the men clung to life, cheering each other as best they could with the hope that daylight would bring some passing vessel to their relief. How long and gloomy that night was, few of us can imagine—one steadily dying, the other feeling that death would soon seek him out despite all that he could do. Thus wore the night away, and just in the grey of the morning they said to each other that their lives depended on making another effort to right the boat. For this purpose their lashings were cast of and together they made the attempt. But Turner's and together they made the attempt. But Turner's helpiessness, the cold water, the rough waves all worked against them, and with a cry of despair lips, Torner let go his precarious hold and sank beneath the foaming waters. As he rose again he became entangled in the rigging of the mast, but was slowly drowning when Merritt made up his mind to rescue him. Crawling carefully to the tip of the mast, cheering the man to bear up and hold on, he at length reached and brought him back, succeeding, after much hard labor, in again lashing him to the boat. But the poor fellow was too far gone to recover from it and without a word or a groan sank back his full weight on the rope around him, and in a few minutes was dead.

Mcrning brought no relief. Passing sails were too distant to notice the overturned yacht, and Merritt was becoming too weak to make any exertion. He could do no more than let the boat float before the wind. At noon the hope of rescue before death had nearly left. But about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the Manitoba, guided by some ruling hand, bore down upon them. Slowly she bore down, wind blowing and sea running, and they at lastleaw him. What one of the crew asserted was nothing but a log, proved, under the captain's glass, to be the living and dead, and the former was soon in the cabin of the barge. He was just able to stand and could not tell his story until warmed by stimulants and The yacht was taken in tow, and arrived as

A Letter from Bismarck says:—"Rest satisfied that the safety of Germany is being properly secured, and the peace of the world assured. No obstacles will be placed on the part of Germany in the way of a termination of the war, into which she was dragged most unwillingly, but from which she will never retire until the legitimate aspirations of her children are secure and

The Integrity of the Fatherland guaranteed, while the people of Germany are rendered safe from any future cruel and unnecessary conflict, the slaughter resulting from which we cannot but look upon with horror." The Regency Revoked.
