

Evening Telegraph PUBLISHED EVERY AFTERNOON (SUNDAYS EXCEPTED) AT THE EVENING TELEGRAPH BUILDING, No. 108 S. THIRD STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The Price to three cents per copy (double sheet), or eighteen cents per week, payable to the carrier by whom served. The subscription price by mail is Five Dollars per annum, or One Dollar and Fifty Cents for two months, invariably in advance for the time ordered.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1870.

The earliest regular edition of the Evening Telegraph goes to press at 1 1/2 o'clock, and the subsequent regular editions at 2 1/2, 3 1/2, and 4 1/2. Whenever there is important news of the progress of the European war, extra editions will be issued after this hour, and before the regular time for the early edition.

THE RUMORED RETREAT OF THE PRUSSIANS.

A very startling and very indefinite rumor was flashed across the cable yesterday to the effect that the Prussians were in full retreat from Paris. There is of course a very strong probability that there is not a word of truth in this story, but the manner in which it is told makes it appear as if at least possible that it may be true. If such a movement has taken place it is almost impossible, in the absence of any further information, to surmise what it means. Dreadful stories are told, certainly, about the destructive fire from Fort Mont Valerien, and particularly of the exploits of one wonderful gunner, who has managed to keep the whole Prussian army at bay, but neither these nor the rumors of successful sorties from the city can account for the sudden abandonment of the siege. Before the Prussians advanced upon Paris they were undoubtedly well informed with regard to the nature of its defenses, and they could scarcely have estimated the labors necessary for its reduction as less than they have proved themselves to be. If they ever really intended to prosecute the siege in earnest, they ought to be by this time nearly if not quite ready to commence active offensive operations, with all their siege guns and other appliances at hand; and the abandonment of such an enterprise at such a moment must be due to some cause that do not appear upon the surface. We hope sincerely that the rumor of the retreat of the Prussians may prove to be true, and that its real significance will be found to be a determination on the part of both belligerents to bring the war to a conclusion without further bloodshed. There are indications every day that the Prussians are getting more and more anxious to conclude a peace, for not only are many of their own people becoming dissatisfied with the prolongation of the war now that France has been punished and humbled, but the danger of interference on the part of the other European powers increases with each day that the conclusion of a peace is postponed. The Prussians have in their possession the whole of Alsace and Lorraine, with the exception of Metz, and this place certainly cannot hold out long against them if they choose to bring their whole force against it, so that really they are in a position to make such terms as will give them all they can demand, with any assurance that France will grant or the other powers permit them to accept. If they consent to a peace now, upon such a basis as will give them security in the future, without placing them in the position of overbearing conquerors, they will win the applause of the civilized world even more than they have by their unexampled military successes.

THE CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Tax great fact of national importance decided by the late elections is that the next Congress will contain a working majority of Republican members. That party retains its present strength in Ohio, Iowa, and Nebraska, and if it has lost, as is reported, two members in Indiana, and a few in Pennsylvania, these losses fall so far below the Democratic estimates that there is no danger of a change in the political complexion of the House of Representatives. The general policy of the administration has been indorsed, and when it is remembered that the returns of this year are contrasted with those of the wonderfully successful Presidential campaign of 1868, Republicans have good reason to congratulate themselves upon the net results. The casualties of the campaign most deep y to be regretted are the defeat of Schenck, of Ohio, and Morrill, of the Seventeenth district in this State. They were both able and zealous champions of protection, and have both been beaten by very small majorities, in close districts. The loss of their services in the coming contest on the tariff question would be a public calamity, but as it is alleged that their adversaries owe their temporary triumph to frauds which can be easily proven, it is not improbable that they may both continue to occupy the positions in which they have done much good service. If they make a successful contest for their seats the reported Democratic Congressional victories from the States voting in October will be so nearly counterbalanced by Democratic losses that the Democratic net gain can scarcely exceed one or two members.

The New York World of yesterday, in an article setting forth, in a series of brief paragraphs, the claims of the Democratic organization to support, brings into bold relief the allegation that "It is the Party of Free Trade." The Pennsylvania Democrats who favor protection can expect no sympathy from their political associates in other sections of the Union. They will be read out of the party if it should ever grow strong enough to enable its leaders to indulge in their wretched luxury of excommunication. In the whole catalogue of their so-called principles there is not one to which they are as sincerely attached as free-trade. Since their warfare against the negro has proved unavailing, their main point of attack hereafter will be the diversified industries of the nation, and every Pennsylvanian who contributes to their triumph thereby imperils vital interests of this Commonwealth.
