LYNCH LAW IN INDIANA.

Horrible Outrages Hobbers Hang by a Band of Wisten Hen.

A special telegram from New Albany, Indiana, October 26, to the Civelanati Gazelle says .--Southern Indiana has been again disgraced by the outrages of a mob. The particulars are as follow :-- Last Wednesday night six men went to the residence of John Fisher, near Orleans, Orange county, and buttered down the door with a rail. They entered the house and demanded Fisher's money, threatening him and his wife and children with instant death if any resistance was made. Under this threat Fisher delivered them the money-$150. After the robbers left Fisher gave the alarm, and pursuit was immediately made.

On Saturday Pickard and Tougate were captured. On Tuesday that were taken to Orleans for a preliminary examination, when they were both identified by Fisher and to default of bail were remanded to jail. They left Orleans about 10 o'clock last night, in charge of a posse of twenty-five men. When about four miles from Orleans, and about crossing the last river bridge, about one hundred disguised and wellarmed and well-organized men role out of some woods and took the prisoners from the escort, and with scarcely a moment's delay the ropes were placed around the necks of the two unfortunates, their feet knowced from under them, and the two bodies were left swinging to the railing of the bridge.

The scene is described as a fearful and heart-sickening one. The guards were ordered to stand aside, and the trembling robbers begged for merey or time to prepare for the stern reali-ties awaiting them, but the vigilants knew no such word as mercy. The bodies hung as left until this morning, when the Coroner ordered them cut down.

Pickard's remains were taken to his home in Greene county by his brother, who was a witness of this fearful tragedy. Poor Tongate's remains have not been called for, and he will probably be buried by the county. Two more of the robbers were arrested in Greene county to-day, and are to be taken to Orleans for a preliminary examination, and it is feared that they will share the fate of their comrades.

The excitement throughout Orange county and the southern part of the State is intense. Some reports say these men are a remnant of the old Reno gang, while others say they are a part of a well-organized and formidable gang making their base in Greene county.

JAPANESE VISITORS.

A Late Arrival of Princes.

A party of sixteen distinguished military officers and citizens of Japan lately stopped at the Briggs House in Chicago. They arrived from San Francisco by way of the Union Pacific Rallroad. Their stay in that city, however, was limited to two days. They left Chicago to-day for New York, where they will be joined by eleven other of their countrymen who are now in California.

The party in Chicago was in charge of Nakahama Mungero, a benevalent-looking man, aged about 38 years. A reporter for the Chicago Times, who speaks Japanese much better than he writes English, was sent to interview the party. This much was learned of their doings: With the exception of five young men, they are officers of high rank in the royal army of Japan. Nakahama, who is in charge, holds a position in rank equal to that of General Hancock or General Meade in our ownarmy. With the party is a veritable prince, by name Meyusama. He is a nephew of the Emperor. The five young men are the eldest sons of certain of the nobility. All are sent out by the Japanese Government to visit Europe, and study matters in that country during the progress of the war between the French and Prussians. After having visited the different army headquarters they will, with two or three exceptions, return to London and receive a thorough English education. General Nakahama Mungoro was educated in Massachusetts, and is tolerably conversant with the politics of this country. He talks good English, but, as he preferred to talk in his own native language, he was, of course, accommo dated. He likes Chicago, and thinks the Briggs House superior to anything of the kind in his own country. The food he says lays over the army rations furnished them by the imperial commissary of subsistence. Like other mortals, Nakahama is troubled with allments of a serious nature. Rheumatism has fixed itself upon him, and last evening he was busily engaged in affix-ing lean-looking leeches to histat calves. The bloodthirsty little scamps took hold as though they had always been used to that kind of nour.shment. The party were all well dressed, in the latest American fashion. They were assigned rooms on the third floor, and enjoyed themselves, after a hearty supper, in smoking optam and playing skatsbabyon, a game similar in some respects to draw-poker. They went to bed early, and, it is to be he ped, slept soundly.

NORWAY AND ITS CAPITAL -SCENERY IN THE | ing with the principles of '76 behind us, who NORTH.-In going to Norway, writes a corre-spondent of the Independent, the landing place is at a little town in Sweden called Strand. The Norwegian line is near; and we pass it in a drosky drawn by two of the ardent little Norwegian horses, at great speed, over a road smooth and perfect. The country is hilly but fertile, and does not lose by the change of name its lake character. The road to the seaconst runs through magnificent woods of pine, and the ride of twenty miles is of extreme interest. The region is historical-the battle-ground between the two kingdoms. At Frederickshald Charles XII ended his career, by his death relieving the country from the stress of wars he had waged, but laying upon her the great weight of his renown. It is a rock fortress, and was of great strength in those days. The town lies up a ford, down which we took steamer in the early morning for Christiania. The coast of Norway about the entrance of the great jord at the head of which Christiania stands is extremely rocky and savage. It takes eight or nine hours from Frederickshald. When far enough inland to see both shores, the scenery becomes interesting. On the left rises a line of fir-covered mountains, just distant enough to wear the de p moun-tain blue. The fjord itself is one of the noblest character. At Drobak it contracts to a narrow strait, which is fortified, but spreads out beyond; and at Christiania it is a large inland sea again, with an arm stretching many miles southward. The city, half as large as Stockholm, is not so conspicuous, as several islands interrupt the view; and it does not rise upon heights, but is rather level. But as it is seen with the fjord from the surrounding hills, and especially from the ranges of blue mountains to the west, it is exceedingly beautiful. There seems to be an instinctive feeling in these countries of dark foliage for the strong contrast of white in the buildings, just as the warmth of red seems to be the natural color in cold farming regions; and Christiania, like its sister capital, is shining white.

The city is in reality a great rural village, with space enough for separate family dwellings in the American manner, but with more variety and perhaps better taste in style. This manner of living may partly account for the absence of the out-of-door assemblages and more public life of other cities. There is no lack of parks and water-side resorts; but it is noticeable that there is a social seclusion and in-door life, which must be accounted for by the different temper of the people from those of Denmark and Sweden.

There is a freshness in the air and a sweetness only felt in rural towns near mountains, and there is a special charm in these long evenings, when the bright flash goes around the sky from sunset to dawn. The city is new, dating back not over two hundred and fifty years, with but few historic incidents. and it has never had any merit architecturally. The great fire, which is within the memory of most of us, left room for new buildings, and it has the appearance of a modern and rather thriving town. The University of Norway, the King's Palace, and the Capitol give it a claim to be a capital city; but it, like the kingdom, has never exerted any great organized influence in Europe. But the expectation awakened by its charming name will not be disappointed, if sea and mountains in the ripest of summer days have any power to charm.

CAUSE AND EFFECTS OF HURRICANES. - This hurric

can deny them the right?

One, two, or three years hence, if the news of the afternoon is correct, we shall have gone through a war, spent millions, required the death of a hundred thousand men, and be then where we are now-two nations, a little more angry, a little poorer, and a great deal wiser; and that will be the only difference; we may just as well settle it now as then. You cannot go through Massachusetts and recruit men to bombard Charleston or New Orleans. The Northern mind will not bear it; you can never make such a war popular. The first outset may be borne; the telegraph may bring us news that Anderson has bombarded Charleston, and you may rejoice; but the sober second thought of Massachusetts will be, "wasteful, unchristian, guilty." The North never will endorse such a war.

We stand to-night at the beginning of an epoch which may have the peace or the ruin of a generation in its bosom. Inaugurate war, we know not where it will end: we are in no condition to fight. The South is poor and we are rich. The poor man can dot vice the injury to the rich man that the rich man can do to the poor man. Your wealth rides safely on the bosom of the ocean, and New England has its millions afloat. The North whitens every sea with its wealth. The South has no commerce; but she can buy the privateers of every race to prey on yours. It is a dangerous strife when wealth quarrels with poverty.

I distrust these guns at Fort Sumter. I do not believe that Abraham Lincola means war. I do not believe in the madness of the Cabinet. Nothing but madness can provoke war with the Gulf States. There is a safe way to compromise. It is this:-Seem to provoke war. Cannonade the forts. What will be the first result? New York commerce is pale with bankruptey. The af-frighted seaboard sees grass growing in its streets. Those guns fired at Fort Sumter are only to frighten the North into a compromise. If the administration provokes bloodshed, it is a trick-nothing else. It is the masterly cunning of the devil of compromise, the Secretary of State. He is not mad enough to let these States run into battle. He knows that the age of bullets is over. If a gun is fired in Southern waters, it is fired at the wharves of New York, at the bank vaults of Boston, at the money of the North. In twelve months you will see the Union reconstructed, with a constitution like that of Montgomery.

As sure as a gun is fired to-night at Fort Sumter, within three years from to-day you will see thirty States gathered under a constitution twice as damnable as that of 1787.

A CHINESE NOVEL.

Here is the plot of a Chinese novel called "The Twins." It is given in a recent review of Chinese literature, by Jessie E. Ringwalt .-

A husband and wife, after years of constant bickering, finally differ seriously about the marriage of their twin daughters. These lovely girls are as sweet and charming as the twin blossoms of the briffiant rose, or the flowers of the odorous herb bending before the breeze.

The husband is absolutely determined to dis-pose of them according to his own choice, and the wife, with equal obstinacy, claims the same right. The parents each select their favorite suitors, and the marriage presents, which are an indispensable preliminary, are brought to the house at the same moment.

The irate father drives away with contumely the porters who bear the presents sent by the sultors chosen by the mother, and his wife flings aside with contempt those presented by her husband's favorite.

The debate waxes warmer, and threatens to become interminable, and the case is at length carried before the official who has legal jurisdiction over contests between parents. The magistrate is a prudent and worthy mau, who, after listening carefully to the question at issue, demands that the daughters shall be summoned.

The young girls are brought and kneel before the tribunal. The magistrate permits them to remain silent, but orders them to exhibit their preference by bowing either to the right, where the suitors chosen by the mother are arranged or to the left, where stand those selected by the father.

The four suitors are equally repulsive to the The four suitors are equally repulsive to the girls, and the twins perseveringly bow their heads and rest their eyes steadily upon the floor. The magistrate, appreciating the feelings of the daughters, instantly dismisses all the suitors, and endeavors to negotiate a peace between the belligerents, but, as he fails utterly in his pacific intentions, he proposes a plan of adjustment—the Chinese specific for the cure of all evils—a competitive examination. The two men who shall prepare the best essays

The two men who shall prepare the best essays upon a given subject shall become the husbands of the twins. No possible objection can be offered to such an admirable scheme, and the examination takes place. But, unfortunately, only one essay is found worthy of acceptance, and the author of it absolutely refuses to be married, because the Higher Powers have con-demned him to celibacy. He explains that he has been six times betrothed, and six times have his lady loves died suddenly as the victim of a terrible fate. Learned astrologers, consulted npon the subject, have declared that he will always be the subject of misfortune to a wife. "Perhaps so," answers the wise magistrate, "you will be the cause of misfortune to a wife, but not to-two!" not to-two!

An argument so irresistible overwhelms all present, the difficulties are vanquished, and he fortunate essayist happily marries both the wins wins.

destructive on the solid land, and always carrying danger and death to those who "go down to the sea in ships." The present year, so remarkable for the social and governtal changes going on in various quarters of the globe, bids fair to be known in future annals as one replete with remarkable elemental displays. Thus we have had earthquakes of unusual power, drouths of almost unexampled duration, floods which have swept away houses and people from points and places never before known to suffer from such a cause, and hurricanes which for severity and destructiveness show no parallel since 1858. These latter have, however barely touched the territory of the United States, their force and destructiveness having been expended in parabolic circles nearer the equator; but their results on the ocean have carried sorrow into families in every part of our broad land, and poverty also, for many of the craft which have succambed to the fearful gales in the Caribbean and other seas, carried down into the unknown depths not only the head and main support of the family, but also the venture containing most, if not all, of their worldly substance. In the region of the West Indies hurricanes are experienced in greater frequency and with far more violence than elsewhere on this hemisphere. During the present season they have been unusually violent, and the loss of life and property on land and sea must be quite unprecedented. Cuba has come in for more than her share of misfortune in this particular, if we may credit reports. Nature, as if repenting her lavishness upon the soil of Cuba, has, it would appear, sought to undo her work by sending hurricanes, earthquakes, and pestilence, carrying with them death and desolation, where anon there was nothing but tranquillity, bounteous harvests and contentment. And the same mercurial conduct has inspired the dame with respect to the "everfaithful isle" time out of mind; for, according to good authority, no fewer than 355 hur-ricanes swept over Cuba between the year 1493 and the year 1855, and of these 245 occurred in the three months of August, September, and October. The severest was that of 1858, which swept over, a very besom of destruction, the whole of the West Indies, and extended northward and eastward until it nearly reached the European shore, while its western edge touched the coast of the United States, impelling on our shores those extraordinary tides of October 24 and 25 of the same year. A curious feature of these hurricanes is that they never extend to the equator or touch either of the poles. In this connection, it is something to be assured that the laws which govern the movements of these phenomenal storms are becoming better understood by meteorologists, and that while the precautions this knowledge may suggest will not serve to avert future disasters, a saving of life and property may be attained.

PHILLIPS AS & FALSE PROPHET .- When the news of the firing on Fort Sumter, in April, 1861, reached Massachusetts, Wendell Phillips made a speech in New Bedford, in which he said :---

Here are a series of States girding the Gulf, who think that their peculiar institu-tions require that they should have a separate government. They have a right to decide that question, without appealing to you or me. A large body of people, sufficient to make a nation, have come to the conclusion that they will have a government of a certain Who denies them the right ? Standform.
