THE DAILY EVENING TELEGRAPH. PHILADELPHIA, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1870.

SCHENVK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SEA-1 by the saloon passengers and presented to them WEED TONIC, AND MANDRAKE PILLS are the oily medicines needed to cure consumption, and there are but two things to do to make lugs heal.

First. The liver and stomach must be got into a healthy condition, for when the lungs are wasting the whole body is wasting, and the food of a consumptive, even if he has an appetite, does not jourish the body. If the liver and stomach as loaded with slime it lies there and takes the yoom of food, consequently the patient has n appetite, or very little, and the gastric juice cannot mix with the food which lies in the stonach, and spolls or sours and passes off without nourishing the system.

Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver and stomach and carry off this slime. The Seaweed Tonic is a very pleasant stimulant, and acts as an ilkall, which, taken right after eating, unites with the gastric juice and dissolves the food. Then by partaking freely of the Pulmonic Syrup the food is turned into good chyme and chyle; then good blood is made, and the body begins to grow. As soon as the patient begins to gain in flesh the matter in the lungs begins to ripen and they heal up. This is the only way to cure consumption. No one ever was curd unless they began to gain in fiesh.

The second hing is, the patients must stay in a warm room intil they get well: it is almost impossible to prevent taking cold when the lungs are diseased, but it must it must be prevented or a cun cannot be effected. Fresh air and riving out are all wrong. Physicians who recommend that course lose their patients if their lungs are badly diseased, and yet because they must stay in the house they must not sit down quiet: they must walk about the room as much and as fast as the strength will bear, to get up a good crculation of blood. The patients must keep in good spirits, be determined to get well. This has agreat deal to do with the appetite, and is the great point to gain.

PERIMS OF THE SEA.

The Less of the Ship J. S. De Wolfe and Res-cue of Her Officers and Crew. The following letter giving an account of the loss of the ship J. S. De Wolfe, on her passage from Liverpool to Philadelphia, and the rescue of her officers and crew, was written by Judge Parce, in reply to a letter from a gentleman of New York requesting an account of that event:-

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17, 1870. DEAR SIR: -In reply to your favor of the 13th nst. respecting the rescue of the officers and crew of the ship J. S. De Wolfe, I make the following statement:-

I was a passenger on the steamship Wisconsin, which left Liverpool on the 29th of September last for New York. We had favoring breezes and a smooth sea until Sunday, the 2d inst., when a westerly wind began to blow, which soon increased to a gale. The sea was violently agitated and the storm continued for a week

On the morning of Wednesday, the 5th instant, we discovered a ship on our starboard quarter with the upper portion of her mainmast carried away and hanging over her side. As we approached her she appeared to be laboring in the sea and showed signs of distress. In a few minutes she ran up her signals informing us that she was sinking. By this time the Wisconsin had passed her at the distance of about half a mile from her on our starboard side. Captain Villiams, of the Wiscensin, promptly ordered the ship to be rounded-to and the boats to be prepared for launching. He then ran the Wis-consin within hailing distance of her and in-oursed why they did not use their heat which ovired why they did not use their boat which wis plainly visible on the deck of the ship, and was informed that it was stove. The Wisconsin was then so near to her and the sea was running so violently that many of the passengers apprehended that the two ships would be dashed against each other. The Wisconsin then steamed ahead, and, 1 think, rounded to again to place herself in a favorable position to enable her boats to reach the sinking ship. As soon as one of the boats was ready to be launched. Mr. McDermott, the second officer of the Wisconsin, stepped for-ward and said he would go in her, and asked for volunteers to accompany him. Six of the crew of the Wiscensin at oncestepped forward, volunteered to go, and prepared themselves for the duty and peril by taking off their shoes and girding around them life-preservers. The sea was running so violently that it was with difficulty the boat could be launched. The Wisconsin rolled as if she were a cockle shell, the gun boats of the quarter-deck being frequently steeped in the water. At length the boat was successfully got off from the Wisconsin, the sinking ship at this time being a long distance With some difficulty I passed along the astern. deck to the stern of the ship, and was holding on by the railing, watching the boat tossed to and fro on the billows, when suddenly the Wisconsin shipped a sea astern, and instantly I found myself off my feet and struggling in the water on the deck to hold on to a part of the rall, which I caught in my fall, and which furnished me with a firm grip. same wave washed the ship's surgeon, Dr. Bird, against the rudder chains, and seriously injured his face, and carried the saloon steward. Henry Wood, against something which broke his leg. Several of the passengers were thrown down and submerged in it. I was compelled to withdraw from the deck thoroughly drenched. and apprehensive of a repetition of the wave. time I was redressed and had returned to the deck, a part of the crew of the sinking ship had been taken on board the Wisconsin, and the boat had returned to take off the captain and the remainder of them. I was informed that this was done by throwing a life-buoy with a rope attached on board the ship, which the men in turn fastened around them and then jumped into the sea, and were pulled on board the boat. In the same manner they were taken on board the Wisconsin. The sea was running so violently that it was impossible to take the boat alongside of either ship without the danger of her being crushed or swamped. After all, nineteen in number, had been rescued, the boat with much trouble and great delay was brought alongside of the Wisconsin and successfully swang to the davits, and holsted with her crew on board the ship, without accident to any one except that the boatswain, one of the rescuers, fell overboard in lifting a man from the sea into the boat, but was fortunately got on board again. When the rescuers reached the deck of the Wisconsin they were received with cheers by the passengers and The success of the enterprise was no crew. doubt due to the skill with which the boat was aunched and managed on the waves and prought again on board in the midst of so vio-When Captain Spain came on board the Wisconsin he informed us that his ship was the J 8. De Wolfe, thirty-seven days from Liverpoel, bound to Ph-ladelphia, ladened with railroad iron and other merchandise; that on the morning of the day on which we met her the ship had lost her mainmast, and had shipped a sea which stove in her deck, partly filled her with water, and left her in a sinking condition, and probably go down in a few hours after we left her. He said that he had very little hope that Captain Williams would send his boat to heir rescue, as the sea was running so violently that he did not suppose that he would assume the responsibility of having men venture their lives in the effort to save them. One of his owo crew was so alarmed at the peril of jumping into the sea that he said he preferred to stay on board the sinking ship; and after the life buoy had been fastened to him, Captain Spain was compelled to push him into the sea to make him out the ship as a mark of their appreciation of their gallant conduct. The highest praise is also due to Captain Williams, of the Wisconsin, for the promptitude of his action in determining to undertake the res-cue amidst so much difficulty and danger. The names of the men who constituted the resculng party, as furnished to the New York Herald, are Charles McDermott, Second Officer, James Lamb, Josiah Manchester, John E. Lewis, David Owens, Thomas McEvoy, and John Rees. Yours very truly, WM. S. PEIRCE.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

Jannuschek as "Deborah."

Herr Mosenthal's drama of Deborah, which was first made known to the playgoers of this country by Miss Bateman, in a rather poor adaptation entitled Leah, the Forsaken, is a plous and not unpoetical piece, which presents a number of admirably-conceived dramatic situations, and one finely-outlined character that, in the hands of such artists as Ristori and Janauschek, is very effective. Deborah is a protest against the persecution to which the Jews have been, within a very recent period, subjected in some portions of Germany, and it is inspired by the broadest and truest Christian spirit. In spite of its many merits, however, it must be confessed that a great portion of it is excessively dull, and Mad'lle Janauschek would be doing a real service to her auditors if she would curtail those portions of the play in which she herself does not appear. This, we think, could easily be done in such a manner as to preserve the thread of the story, and the drama as acted would gain in strength and interest. "Deborah" has always been esteemed by Mad'lle Janauschek's admirers in the city as one of her most impressive performances, and the manner in which she acted aroused the enthusiasm of her audience last evening at the Chesnut Street Theatre. Janauschek is a powerful and passionate rather than a tender and pathetic actress, but that she can portray the softer emotions was amply demonstrated by the manner in which she played the love scene with "Joseph" in the second act last evening. Fechter plays the lover better than any male actor now upon the American stage, but he might take a lesson from Janauschek in this scene, and it would be difficult to imagine a more perfect mingling of power and tenderness than she portrays in this situation. It is in the subsequent portions of the play, however, that Janauschek is most impressive, in the scenes when "Deborah" is turned away from her lover's door, and when she meets him in the churchyard after his marriage, and all the emotions of despised love and religious fanaticism stirred within her, she pours upon him the terrible curse which in the beautiful and pathetic ending of the piece she lives to turn into a blessing. As the curtain fell upon the churchyard scene last evening the audience responded to the efforts of the actress with a burst of enthusiastic applause such as is too seldom heard in our theatres.

There is no fine character painting in Janauschek's "Deborah," but it is rather a grand abstraction, an epitome of the wrongs of Judaism, and there is something titanic in the emotions expressed by the sombrely-dressed woman who takes no pains to represent merely the persecuted Jewess of a play that might be a dramatization of a Sunday-school book, but who merely considers the dramatist's sketch as the medium for the portrayal of the tremendous passions that it but faintly suggests. This is not the kind of acting to which our playgoers are most accustomed, and when any but a really great artist undertakes it the less we have of it the better, as a general rule. But Janauschek is one of those actresses who are not bound by the conventionalities of her art, and her "Deborah" would be magnificent still if she violated in it each and all of the common precepts of dramatic propriety. It is one marked peculiarity of this artist's style that she is not stereotyped. She has a broad general outline that she fills up, but the minor details she apparently leaves to the inspiration of the moment. The consequence is her acting has a freedom and spontaneity that add greatly to its impressiveness. Last night her performance of "Deborah" differed in a number of particulars from what we remember it on former occasions, and although this method is one that none but a really great artist can follow with success, it is really refreshing to see an actress who has not certain attributes, gestures or tones of voice for every turn of the play, to be repeated night after night and season after season in exactly the same manner. Janauschek's mastery of the English language was even more apparent last evening than it was in her personation of "Mary Stuart," and in the most impressive scenes her auditors were able to forget altogether that they were in the presence an actress who was trying a most difficult experiment. The audience last evening was larger than on Monday and Tuesday, but there was not such an attendance as the great artist deserved, and it is certainly not creditable to the culture and taste of the Philadelphia public that this, the greatest dramatic artist upon the American stage, if we except, perhaps, Mr. Forrest, should play a brief engagement of six nights to anything else than crowded houses. .

THE GREAT WHISKY ESTABLISH-MENT OF THIS CITY.-H. M. DALY'S great whisky warerooms are located at No. 222 South FRONT Street and No. 139 DOCK Street. building, which is probably the largest of its kind in the United States, is five stories high, and runs through from Front to Dock street, a distance of at least 215 feet. Whiskles of the rarest and purest brands are stored on every floor of this huge struc-ture, and the seeker after the genuine article can there find Bourbon of old date, wheat ditto, and that champion of all whiskies, the Golden Wedding. It is of some importance to the liquor merchants of this and other cities to know that Mr. Daly's stock embraces the productions of the celebrated dis-tilleries belonging to Thomas Moore & Son, Joseph S. Finch & Co., and Thomas Moore. Their whiskles are always made from the best grains, double copper distilled and put up in seasoned, heavily-charred, fron-bound barrels. As agent, therefore, of these well-known firms, Mr. Daly justly claims that he can supply the trade with the finest whisky in the market, and in the original packages as received direct from the manufacturers. This he will vouch for, and this is a point which de-serves the notice of all purchasers. 9 13tuths26t
