MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

Janauschek as "Lady Macbeth."

Janauschek gave such a personation of "Lady Macbeth" last evening at the Chesnut as was only possible to a great artist. The reading of Shakespeare's text—something very different from the mere mastery of the pronunciation of the language—was, considering all the circumstances of the case, remarkably good, and in many of the finest passages she brought out the latent poetry of the words in a manner that would have done her credit if she had been a student of Shakespeare in the original all her life. It is as an actress, however, rather than as a reader that Janauschek appeals now to the consideration of her auditors, and to place the lowest possible estimate upon her "Lady Macbeth," it is such a performance of the part as has not been seen upon the American stage since Miss Cushman left it. She has essentially the right conception of the character, and in the first part of the tragedy she is the bold, determined, but not cold-blooded woman with whom ambition and love for her husband are synonymous terms. She is more resolute in stifling her natural feelings, and more remorseless than "Macbeth" in the commission of the crime that will win her the prize she seeks; but the crime once committed, remorse eats her heart away, and her distrait manner in the scene previous to the banquet and at the banquet, when she can scarcely shake off her lethargy sufficiently to come to the support of her husband as he stands appalled at the ghost of "Banquo," are the premonitions of the fearful revelations of the sleep-walking scene. Janauschek's "Lady Macbeth" is grandly outlined, but it lacks some of the finer details that we look for, and that we are sure the actress will supply when she has become accustomed to performing the part in English. The greatest deficiency noticeable last evening was a want of intensity, more of voice than manner, especially in the murder scene, and the actress made a mistake, we think, in not returning to the stage after the discovery of the murder, where an opportunity is offered for a great point, for the reaction that occurs in "Lady Macbeth" is distinctly marked in the text of the play at this point. The sleep-walking scene was picturesque and impressive in the extreme. Our limited space to-day will not permit us to make a detailed criticism of this performance, and we can only indicate briefly its chief characteristics, and advise our readers to attend this evening and judge for themselves. Janauschek played last evening to the largest audience she has yet had, which was a gratifying indication that the play-goers of this city are beginning to discover her merits. That her season has not been as successful as it deserved to be is attributable mainly to bad management. On her arrival here on Monday she found that the performance for the evening had not been announced, and that in many of the papers there were no advertisements of any kind, while the posters for the streets had not been put out until the last minute, and then without any definite statements of the performances for each evening. Such management as this for an artist who was trying a difficult and precarious experiment was culpable in the highest degree, and Mad'lle Janauschek will not do herself justice unless she procures the aid of a reasonably competent person to attend to her business matters for her. In spite of the discouragements to which she has been subjected, she has during the present week demonstrated in the most satisfactory manner her capabilities as an English-speaking actress, and we hope to see her soon again with an increased repertoire which will include "Cleopatra," "Queen Katharine," and other of the greatest English tragic roles.

A word of commendation is due to Mr. Frederick Robinson for what was, on the whole, a very creditable performance of the part of "Macbeth" last evening. This is one of the most difficult of Shakespearian characters to represent passably well, and Mr. Robinson, although his "Macbeth" was not above criticism, really deserves praise for a piece of acting that was much above the average in merit.

The City Amusements.

AT THE CHESNUT there will be a matinee to-day, when Mad'lle Janauschek will appear as the "Debutante," in a sketch written for her by Mr. Augustin Daly, entitled Come Here. The performance will conclude with The Bachelor of Arts.

This evening Mad'lle Janauschek will repeat her performance of "Lady Macbeth."

On Monday Mr. Frank Drew will make his appearance after an absence of four years.

AT THE WALNUT the comedy of Fox and Goose and Black-eyed Susan are announced for this afternoon, and Fox and Goose and Nicholas Nickleby for this evening.

AT THE ARCH the comedy of The Morning Call, with Mrs. Drew as "Miss Chillington," Mr. Craig's burlesque of Don Juan, and the nautical drama of The Pilot will be performed this evening.

THE MISSES GOTTSCHALK, assisted by Mr. Carl Wolfsohn, will give a farewell concert this evening at the Foyer of the Academy of Music. A fine programme will be presented, and as the ladies have claims upon the public both on account of their own talents and the esteem in which the memory of their lamented brother is held, there will undoubtedly be a full attendance.

AT DUPREZ & BENEDICT'S OPERA HOUSE Mr. C. E Rollins will have a benefit this evening, when he will appear as "Badger" in The Streets of New York.

On Monday next Messrs. Duprez & Benedict, with their minstrel troupe, will commence their regular season.

ADAM FOREPAUGH'S CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE will give two exhibitions to-day at the corner of Broad and Wallace streets. In the afternoon at 1 o'clock, and in the evening at 7½ o'clock.

AT THE AMERICAN an entertaining Saturday night programme is announced.

AT THE ELEVENTH STREET OPERA HOUSE a pleasing variety of songs, dances, and burlesques will be presented this evening.

AT THE ARCH STREET OPERA HOUSE an amusing minstrel performance will be given this evening.

THE GERMANIA ORCHESTRA will resume their public rehearsal at Musical Fund Hall this afternoon.

MADAME MARIE SEEBACH will appear on Monday evening at the Academy of Music as "Mary Stuart," and during the week she will personate some of the principal heroines of German tragedy.

THE GRAND ENGLISH OPERA COMBINATION, consisting of the principal members of the two troupes of last season, will appear at the Academy of Music on Monday evening, November 14.
