From Our Own Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, November 12. The latest returns from the various States which elected Congressmen this week show that there will be a nominal Republican majority of from twenty-five to thirty in the popular branch of the Forty-second Congress. I say nominal, because it will be a discordant and unreliable majorky-certainly unavailable as a support to the administration, and distempered and belligerent because of the singular bitterness that the leaders of the House cherish for each other. Butler will have a party, Bingham will have a party, and Farnsworth will have a party, and each will wage relentless war upon the others. Butler will assume to be the administration leader, and he leads baldly and drives mercilessly. In addition to his semi-repudiation policy, he would seek to engraft his blood-and-thunder policy relative to the Alabama claims upon the party, and instead of healing and conciliating the now discordant elements he will widen the breach and steadily waste Republican power. He is first of all for Butler; second, for Butler and Grant's patronage: third, for Butler and Grant, and he lacks the general confidence, both personally and politically, necessary to successful leadership. From no section will he be more implacably antagonized than from his own New England delegations. He is known to be strong with the President, and he will be powerful, but a very large Republican element of the House distrust the sincerity of his devotion to the President, and more still distrust him generally as a leader. Now that General Schenck is out of the way. Batler cannot be subordinated, and he is not the man to yield any possible advantage.

Bingham and Farnsworth are also sadly wanting in the essential qualities of great leadership. Bingham is brilliant, and at times sublime; but he is deficient in balance. He is petulant and easily vanquished by his infirmities of temperament. He is personally very bitter against Butler, and he strikes at his adversary within his party more venomously than at the common enemy, and he strikes in season sometimes, but more frequently out of season. He is also wanting in the confidence of the party, as are all men who subordinate public interests to private hatred. Farnsworth has already given the country his appreciation of Butler, and if half he has charged Butler with be true, the hero of Dutch Gap should be doing penal service instead of assuming to lead the administration party in Congress. Judge Kelley has never claimed to rival Schenck, Butler, and Bingham in attaining the leadership. He has been wise enough to know that the mantle of Thaddeus Stevens fell upon no one map in the House, and he has been content to lead when the interests of his great State were at stake; and Judge Scofield, who has more of the qualities of a parliamentary leader than any of the others I have named, will not enter into the foolish struggle for the unattainable mastery. Looking over the ground dispassionately, I see no prospect of that Republican unity in the next Congress that will be necessary to make

tion and harmony by correcting his own errors, if the way can be opened to do so successfully. But in Pennsylvania, as in New York and Missouri, the difficulty is to find some common ground on which to recall the elements he has so wantonly driven away from all sympathy with the administration. If he would be just in Pennsylvania, he must proscribe Cameron's proscription by a large list of removals, and select successors from the honest, undefiled men of the State, each of whom would drive a nail in Cameron's political coffin. It would be utter death to Cameron, for, being without popu'ar honor, he must dispense Grant's patronage to make even a show of sustaining himself, and Cameron will fight to the last ditch against any new policy in Pennsylvania. Had the President continued, as he commenced, to discard Cameron as utterly unworthy of confidence and favor, there would have been no Cameron power in the State, and the Republican party would now be united, and notorious Cameron would not have been hanging like a mill-stone about the necks of Cessna, Morrell, Armstrong, Gilfillan, Stewart, and Donley. All of them would have been triumphantly elected, and the Republican power of the State would be unquestioned. But the President was unfaithful to his own positive and expressed convictions as to Cameron, and he warmed him into new life only to find disaster to the administration as the reward. It has been strongly urged by many earnest and sagacious Republican leaders that Governor Curtin should be recalled at once and placed in the Cabinet, but I feel warranted in saying that Curtin would peremptorily decline a Cabinet portfolio. He never pressed himself for such an appointment, and now he could not accept it. His present position is not in accordance with his tastes, but when he returns it will be to accept the sincere plaudits of the people, and not to seek official favors.

How the President will cut the political knots which now entangle him it would be useless to conjecture. He makes the most unlooked-for appointments at times, and he may do so again: but be prepared for a new programme of some kind soon after his return from the City of Brotherly Love.

BLACK SILKS.

Soon after the commencement of the war the entire stock of Black Silks in Lyons was sold to English and American buyers to remove them from danger. This stock comprised all qualities-more bad than goodgoods made to feel heavy, but, though sightly, composed of poor material, which will affect the wear and beauty of the silk. Large quantities are in this country, and are being sold extensively. We, with our old connections and knowledge of the best manufacturers, have been able to supply ourselves with the VERY BEST MAKES KNOWN and TRIED for Twenty Years, and offer them to our customers at prices less than last year's, and less than we have reason to believe they will be after the present season.

DRAP IMPERIAL.

We take pleasure in calling attention to one case, of these beautiful goods in all the new dark shades, which we shall open on Monday, November 14. Among the novelties in our importation of DRESS COODS this season this fabric, for Walking Costume, has deservedly taken a high place in the estimation of our customers, and we would solicit an early inspection. We may remark that while there is a probability of a superabundance in commoner textures this season, of really new and choice French Goods the market will soon be the small Republican supremacy a reliable working majority. It is clear that the past custom of defeated Republican caudidates contesting seats successfully on mere political grounds is at an end. General Schenck has given public notice that he will not contest, and I learn that Mr. Morrell and Mr. Armstrong, of Pennsylvania, have also decided not to claim the seats of their competitors, who have been regularly returned. It is understood, however, that Mr. Cessna will contest Mr. Meyers' seat, but the complexion of the new House will require him to make out a case that would secure the verdict of a sworn and impartial jury, to enable him to succeed. It is not improbable that a strong Western Republican element will judge Mr. Cessna's case with severity, and his chance of gaining the seat in a contest will depend upon his ability to make a case against Mr. Meyers that is free from reasonable doubt. The loss of two-thirds of the Republican majority in Congress is an admonition against the admission of contestants ou mere political grounds that will be gravely heeded by the better men of the House. I am not advised at all of the merits of Mr. Cessna's case. In the present Congress he would be admitted, because gress the man who shows the best right to the seat will get it. President Grant has gone to Philadelphia to spend a day or two with his old friend ex-Secretary Borie. It is given out that he goes on private business: but such is not the fact. He is much disturbed about the result of the late elections. He appreciates the fact that the Republican party is rapidly disintegrating, and that the excuse given for the indifference or open opposition of very many who supported his election is his want of just recognition of the active, faithful elements of the party. He would now correct this grave error if he knew how to do it; but at every step he is confronted by the Camerons and the Chandlers, the Conklings and the Drakes, who forced him into a needless and suicidal war upon the party in the respective States. He has been singularly reticent for a few days. Cameron has tried to explain and strengthen him in the mad political policy forced upon him for Pennsylvania, and Forney has sneezed at the throne as Cameron snuffed. Kelley was with him also, but he had to protest against fresh acts of arrogance on the part of Cameron, and the President was but confused and confounded at the rival struggles for his patronage. He now for the first time appreciates that without Pennsylvania the Republicans cannot succeed in 1873, and he wants to save it: but now is it to be done? His whole patronage is now in the Cameron faction, and thus Cameron has been made a dangerous political power. Although without any element of strength with the people, his swarms of office-holders have too much power to be disregarded. He is therefore lost in his attempt to solve the political problem in Pennsylvania, and he has gone to Philadelphia to confer with a few trusted friends on the subject. Who he will call upon for counsel I cannot say: but he will advise with some men outside of the Cameron camp followers, and if can arrive at any policy that promises Republican unity and peace, he will promptly adopt it. He does not authorize the blustering threats, made in Colonel Forney's editorials, that he is about to punish Republicans who differed from him. He has seen enough of the spirit and independence of the Republicans to learn that no measure of power can intimidate or control them against their convictions, and he will aim at concilia-

self. I am assured by several of my friends that the Bitters will cure my dyspepsis, and at the same time do away with that terrible nausea which you know I am at times subject to. The doctor was in yesterday, and says that all I want is a tonic, and that Plantation Bitters is the best that can be got. Charley-It is just the thing, my dear; and it is strange that I had not thought of it before.
