

OBITUARY.

The Rev. Harrison Lambdin. The recent death of the Rev. Harrison Lambdin is another reminder, if one were needed, of the fact that our war against the Rebellion was in many respects a real war of independence, and like that of Germany in the beginning of this century, the training school for the nation and its best men.

When the Rebellion began he was teaching at the Episcopal Academy, just after graduating at the University. Little past twenty, he gave up his studious habits, his artistic pursuits, and his intense love of domestic life, to take part in the war for the Union.

He was promoted to the rank of Captain, then of Major, and finally by brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel. He served in succession with various brigade and division commanders, and his zeal and ability were thoroughly tested and appreciated by Rice and Chamberlain and Crawford and Hoffman, to all of whom he gave most efficient assistance.

After the war he returned to Philadelphia, and became an Assistant Adjutant-General, with the rank of Captain, then of Major, and finally by brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel.

to adopt the stage for a profession, the sooner she gets rid of it the better. We feel called upon to make these remarks because Miss Pierson played in a manner that entitles her to something more than a merely complimentary notice, and we are doing her a better service by pointing out some of her deficiencies rather than by alluding merely to her merits.
