PARTER RECEIPTION OF STREET, ADDILED ADDILES TO USED AN ADDILED ADDILE

NEWS SUMMARY.

Chy Affairs. -The Joint Special Committee of Councils to consider the bill to exempt the meadow lands in the Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh wards from taxation, met in the Clerk's room yesterday afternoon, but deferred action till they have visited the district. The farmers and landowsers have expended #38,000 on the banks, and ask to be relieved of taxes for three years, to enable them to put the ground in order. -Last evening, at half-past five o'clock.

George Armbruster, a resident of Norristown. had one foot cut off by a train at Ninth and Columbia avenue. He was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital. The injured man died last evening at the hospital, and the Coroner was notified.

-The Republican members of Select and Common Councils for 1871 met yesterday in joint cancus, and made the following nominaions : - Chief Commissioner of Highways, Mablon H. Dickinson; Assistants, Hiram Horter and William Rittenhouse; Chief Engineer of the Water Department, Frederick Graeff; Commissioner of City Property, Jonathan H. Pugh.

-The alarm of fire yesterday afternoon, about 6 o'clock, was occasioned by the burning of some material in the basement of the market house at Sixteenth and Market streets. There was stored there a large quantity of produce, valued at about $10,000, the principal owners of which were Mossrs. Bascom, Woodward, War-wick, Ulmer, Ward & Donelson, and Chambers. The fire was supposed to have been accidental and as far as ascertained there was no insurance on the property destroyed.

-At noon yesterday, a meeting of the South Street Bridge Commission was held in the office of Chief Engineer and Surveyor Kneass, in the Survey Department building, Fifth street, helow Walnut. The business transacted was of a routine character. It was stated that thus far the sum of $75,000 has been expended by the Commission, while the appropriation of $775,-660 made by Councils will be required in the construction of the proposed new bridge. Until recently, work on the bridge has been pushed forward rapidly. The abutment on the west bank is finished, and the foundations for the piers have been laid. Now the Commission has encountered a difficulty with the rallroads crossing at South street, on the west bank of the Schuylkill. It seems that, in order to conform with the grade of the Almshouse property, it is necessary to build the approach to the bridge over the railroad tracks, five in number, one belonging to the Media road, three to the Junction road, and one to the Pennsylvania Extension road, covering 180 feet of ground. The objection lies in building piers to meet the wishes of the re-pective roads, and at the pre-sent time the commission is engaged in devising a plan whereby the difficulty may be overcome. -A meeting of the Joint Special Committee of Councils. Port Wardens, Chamber of Commerce, and Board of Trade was held yesterday with reference to the Horse Shoe shoals. The Coast Survey Department is to be petitioned for a map of the ground.

whose words are understood in the palace and the hamlet; whose melodious numbers enchant the hearts of the refined and as they listened their hearts melted and their educated and move to their profoundest depths the emotions of the humblest cottager. Of such were Homer, Shakespeare, and Burns, who, although widely differing in mental capacity, culture, and in the bent of their genius, yet all "held the glass true to nature." Writing in different eras of the world's history, in different tongues, and on a diversity of subjects, yet the writings of all have been, and will continue to be, read, cherished, and loved by all classes and conditions. This is the highest encomium that posterity can render to mortal, and is only bestowed upon the most illustrious of the sons of men.

The most ancient of all poetry of which we have any record is that of the Hebrews. "It stands apart from all the rest in its solitary grandeur," exciting our admiration and commanding our wonder. Living under a govern-ment ordained by God, surrounded by the daily evidences of Divine interposition, walking as a people under the very shadow of their Creator. poets, inspired "from on high," lit their lamps from celestial fires, and "fung them all burning with the oil of heaven upon this sin-cursed earth."

We next come in the coarse of history to the poetry of Greece, which is the fountain from whose classic waters modern literature has drawn aliment and inspiration. Full of beauties, rich in thought, and wonderful in power as it is, it still lacks the sublimity that distin-guishes Hebrew poetry. The Greek mind, under the domination of a materialistic mythology, beautified and ennobled all that was of the earth; but it lacked the sublime inspiration of an ever-present Jehovah that filled the mind" and heart of the Hebrew poet, and that gave to his soug its divine melody. Before Homer lived the art of poetry was cultivated among the Greeks. Her minstrels-how sweetly no modern ears will ever know-and yet they did sing, and in no ignoble numbers, we may justly conclude, since they were the forerunners of the great poet of the ages-he upon whose brow the kingly crown was early placed, and who in the long march of the centuries has had no follower whom the voice of mankind hailed as his rival. He stands in the poetic world like a grand pyramid in the waste of years, whose antiquity is venerable and undefined, and whose future promises to be as en-during as its origin is unmarked and its present is sublime. Hesiod and Sapphe, with imagery the most gorgeous, passion the most fervent, and tenderness unexcelled; and yet when Homer's voice is heard, their harps are hushed in the swelling beauties of his grander melodies. But alas for Greece and for the world, the genius of her sons was wasted in the licentious luxury of the times. In the midst of her corruption and lost liberties poetic inspiration found a grave.

Anothernation, rude in manners and in culture when Greece was refined and cultivated, took up the mantle as it fell from her unworthy shoulders, and for centuries not only gave laws and civil polity, but in literature, in arts, in arms, governed the world. In Rome's earlier days, and in her ruder times, she contented herself by translating the heroic songs of the vanquished Greeks. But as she advanced in education and refinement to that exalted place she ultimately occupied, she was not wanting in sons whose genius, if not equal to Homer's, has left their indelible impress upon their own and succeeding times. Especially during the Augustan period, when peace and power went hand in hand, was Rome blessed with great poets whose inspired songs have illustrated the brightest pages of her history and bequeathed to mankind a classic literature canooling and valuable beyond price. Then Juvenal wrote and Horace and Virgil left their precious legacles to future generations. From the decline and fall of the Roman empire, through seven long centuries of gloom and darkness, not a single poetic star of any magnitude arose to shed its light upon this rayless night of the "Dark Ages. It was not until the thirteenth century that indgment acknowledged the magical power of his genius. Peasant-born though he was, all ranks and conditions recognized that God had crowned him as "nature's nobleman.

This new land to which we or our fathers before us have come has scarcely yet stretched out her hand to pluck the coveted prize of poetic honors. Her mighty energies have been devoted to cutting down forests, upturning virgin soil, building cities, railroads, highways, and in peopling a continent. When these great and important physical works shall have been accomplished, and she, resting from her mighty labors, shall cultivate the arts, who can predict the power and splendor of her achieve-ments? Having triumphed over all physical obstacles to her power, prosperity, and great-ness, with civil and religious freedom and an enlightened free press marching at the van of our civilization, may she not establish new claims to the world's admiration in the inauguration of a new era, in which her poets shall rival, if not excel, those of the first great re-publics? We may all at least hope that our materialistic tendencies may never obliterate from the minds and hearts of our people a genuine appreciation and love for the true and beautiful in poetry "as song by our bards and foved by our sages.

THE WAR.

LAST NIGHT'S DESPATOHES.

KING WILLIAM ANNOUNCES THE ENTIRE DEFEAT OF THE ARMY OF THE LOIRB. BERLIN, Nov. 30.-The Queen has received the following despatch from King William:-TUESDAY, Nov. 29 .- Frederick Charles reports the complete defeat of the army of the Loire on Monday, in which the French had the 20th Corps, probably the 18th and portions of the 15th and 16th Corps engaged.

A thousand French were found dead on the field, 4000 wounded, and 1600 prisoners.

General de Paladines is reported wounded. German loss 1000, among them a few officers. LONDON, Nov. 30.-The Globe this afternoon published the announcement of the capitulation of the entire Army of the Loire. The report can be traced to no authentic source. Nothing was known of such an event at the German legation here at 9 o'clock to-night.

LONDON, Nov. 30.-(Special to the New York World.)-Letters by balloon from Paris, private letters from Versailles, and despatches from Berlin, all concur in representing that the prospects of the French are extremely glosmy. fermans in the late engagements with the Army of the Loire lost enormously, still their posi-tions have been maintained. The efforts of Aurelles to advance to the relief of Paris have been foiled. The provisions in Paris are almost exhausted; scarcely a fortnight's supply remains.

ST. ANDREW'S.

Col. A. L. Snowden's Assiress at the Anni-versury of the Society last Evening.

The proceedings of the 123d anniversary of the St. Andrew's Society, held last evening, will be found on our eighth page. Among the speeches delivered was one by Col. A. Louden Snowden, in response to the toast to "Poets, Poetry, and Songs." Col. Snowden spoke in his usual happy vein as follows :-

The mere mention of the sentiment just read in our hearing stimulates the imagination, quickens the blood, and fills all our hearts with the most delightful emotions. Old age and youth alike bow before the majesty of song, and acknowledge the power of true poetle genius.

Of our own number there are those whose whitening locks mark them as past the heyday and summer of their lives, yet whose eyes brighten and whose whole being seems inspired as by a supernatural power when some song of the long ago is sung or some poetic inspiration repeated in their hearing. From the earliest recorded thee down through the weary ages, wherever there have been enlightened minds, pure thought, or noble sentiment, there poetry has held a place and been acknowledged as a power. Whether it be the "sweet singer of Israel," wearing the purple of royalty, or the wandering Troubadour, chanting through the mountains, they alike commanded the hearts of the people.

Granting that a poet have mental culture, refined feelings, knowledge of men and things, imagination, passion, and power of expression, there still remain two essentials without which there can be no enduring popularity or power. The first of these is that all poetic thought and utterance must be pure and elevated in its inspiration and teaching. "Men, taken in the aggregate, judge rightly even though they act wrongly. This is fully verified in the history of poetry, since no work essentially immoral has ever maintained an enduring popularity." Spiendid as were the mental endowments of Aristophanes and Pucelle, the immorality and witty licentiousness contained in their writings have long since coudemned them to obscurity This is the unvarying verdict of the present upon the past, and the future will give no greater immunity to immoral teachings than does the present.

The second essential is simplicity in thought and language. He is the greatest of all posts who sways most minds and touches most hearts;

the gloom gave way before the refulgent splendor of Dante's great original genius. He stands as "the father of the Italian language and poetry." His "Divine Comedy" is the first great work "which graces the literature of modern Europe." Time will not per-mit me to dwell upon his excellencies as they deserve. I should speak of his originality, the power of his imagination, the splendor of his diction, the intensity and passion of his great soul that pervaded all his writings; but I must hasten on. Following him comes Petrarch, the founder of the lyric school of Italian poetry: then come Ariosto, Tassoni, and Tasso, who wrote "Jerusalem Delivered, ' which is so full of beauty, tenderness, and purity of thought.

Spain, although prolific in ballads, presents, with but one or two exceptions, no great poet that arrests our attention or commands our admiration. Cervantes was more of a prose writer than poet. This is very remarkable, as the Spanish language in many respects seems peculiarly adapted as a vehicle for poetic thought. Marked throughout by strong traces of the oriental, it is wasted in pomposity and exaggeration.

If we except the reign of Louis XIV, France has given but few names to history that will stand the test of time. Scattered through her literature we encounter the names of La Fontaine, Bolleau, Rousseau, Voltaire, and Lamar-tine, but greater than them all, Beranger. He was the Burns of France. With great originality and power he touched the hearts of all classes of society. A distinguished writer speaking of him says:-"Strong in his Napoleonic tendencies and faith, he kept alive among the people of France the grand memories of the empire; and to his ballads and soul-stirring ditties more than to any other cause may be attributed the re-establishment of the Corsican dynasty. No poet since the beginning of the world has exereised such a power over the destiny of a nation.

Many great names adorn the literature of Ger-The world is, however, much more inmany debted to her for scientific research and metaphysical attainments than for poetic produc-tions, and yet it is difficult to find in the literature of any other nation more illustrious names than those of Schiller and Goethe.

And now, gentlemen, I come to speak, in the order of history, of English and Scottish poetry -last on the list, but first in our affections. As I stand before the open door of this temple of inspired genius, I hesitate to enter. Every step we take within we encounter flustrious names, until we are overwhelmed by their numbers and awe struck by the sublime results of their labors. From grand old Chancer down, what a mighty army of inspired men march bewhat a mighty army of inspired men march be-fore us! Following Chancer come Spenser, Shakespeare, Milton, Butler, Dryden, Pope, Addison, Swift, Thomson, Goldsmith, Ramsey, Young, Cowper, Burns, Scott, Byron, Wads-worth, Campbell, Southey, Coleridge, Shelley. I pause not because I have exhausted the list, but fear I may weary your patience. No other language is adorned by such a galaxy of great names. And under no form of govera-ment except where civil and religious freedom goes hand in hand with a free press could these wonderful results be produced. In no country, perhaps, has poetry been so immediate and pervading in its influence upon the hearts and minds of the people as in Scotland. Wherever a Scotchman is found to-day, wandering it may be in distant lands, far from kindred and home would you reach his heart and excite his enthusinsm? you have but to sing for him the songs of his native land.

And well may his heart thrill, for never were tenderer, sweeter songs sung, or nobler senti-ments uttered, than have fallen from the lips of Scotia's tards. No other land has produ poet who, born and nurtured amid the hu walks of life, has so fully entered into the and sorrows of those by whom he was rounded Appreciating all their wants, his heart open in generous love, he poured their own such a flood of sympathy and to ness that the humblest cottager, in spite his trials and sorrows, felt, and rejolced felt, that "he was a man for The songs of Burns not only captivate elevated the pencantry, but, asce higher, touched common cords of sympa all grades of society, until in astonishment the Lawrs, DeL, Nev. 30-A.
