Bene-dict; "Irene," a tale, V (Concluded); "Chess," by a Tenth-rate Player; "Our Monthly Gossip;" "Literature of the Day."

From "Souvenirs of Song," by Lucy H. Hooper, we take the following description of the manner in which grand operas are produced in Berlin:-

In all essential points the opera in Berlin far surpasses even the traditional glories of the grand opera in Paris. The natural voices of the leading performers are quite as fine as those of the French singers, while their artistic training is even superior, and the chorus and orchestra are simply unapproachable in size, training, and general perfection. All the details of costume and scenery are worthy of study, so minutely have they been elaborated and so careful has been the supervision bestowed upon them. The mise en scene of such operas as the Huguenots, the Prophete, or William Tell, presents not only a gorgeous and effective stage spectacle, but a correct historical picture. Scene-painting and stage-costuming seem to be considered in Berlin as belonging to the fine arts, and to be treated accordingly.

Let us take, for example, one of the best known operas on the modern stage-Faust. As it was first produced in Berlin, every scone was worthy of careful study, and was exquisite in artistic beauty. The morning light streaming through the lattice of 'Faust's' desolate room, the vision of 'Marguerite's' innocent loveliness, the bustle and crowd of the Kermesse, with its gay booths, noisy shows, and animated spectators, were each incomparable in its way. Next came the garden scene, bathed in the golden and rose-hued light of a summer sunset. Gradually, as the scene proceeded, the rosy radiance faded away, and a cold gray twilight stole over the trees and flowers and the distant spires and buildings of the city seen beyond the garden walls. Twilight deepened into night, the sky darkened into a dusky, shadowy blue, the stars came forth one by one, and at last the moon rose, and the curtain fell on the embrace of Faust and Marguerite under a silvery moonlight that flooded the whole scene with so intense and real a lustre that, looking at the shining light and dark shadows, it was almost impossible to realize that art and not nature was the source of the brightness that illumined the stage.

The cathedral scene was equally beautiful, and even more impressive. The stage represented the interior of a vast Gothic cathedral crowded with worshippers, while far in the distance blazed the lights of the altar, and white-robed priests moved to and fro amid clouds of incense and the grand swelling harmonies of the organ. Behind the altar rose a vast window of brilliantly-hued stained glass; one of the upper divisions was open, and through this opening were visible the starry sky and the full moon, whose silvery splendor contrasted wondrously with the golden lustre of the lighted candles. In the foreground knelt Marguerite, weeping, remorseful, despairing, while ever and anon the pillar at her side became intensely luminous and transparent, and the mocking face of Mephistopheles peered forth. In this scene Pauline Lucca surpasses her soft-eyed Swedish rival, though we doubt if the passionate intensity of her acting is as true to Goethe's original delineation as is the crushed, sad hopelessness of the Marguerite of Christine Nilsson. The Walpurgis Night, though less poetic, was the most splendid of all the scenic effects which so charmed us. The scene was set transversely, so as to give the idea of illimitable distance, and it represented a gergeous Eastern palace, through whose arched windows could be seen the glowing atmosphere and luxuriant vegetation of a tropical landscape, while crowds of bright-robed dancinggirls hovered around Faust or in the background, came and went, and floated to and fro to the pulses and pauses of the music. Suddenly, Faust called upon the name of Marguerite, and in an instant the splendid pageant vanished, and before us rose the dark, cold summit of the Blocksberg, with an unseen moon behind it lighting the heavens with uncarthly radiance. And then along the side of the mountains glided a white form with unmoving feet and stony eyes, and a ghastly scarlet ring around the slender throat. Gounod was forgotten, and the influence of Goethe's genius reigned supreme.

What he proposed to do is sufficiently obvious. The entire commercial world of his day, Venice alone excepted, was anxious to discover a passage by sea to India. During a space of two centuries the facts and fables recounted by Marco Polo had gained more or less credence in Europe, and the not un-natural desire to visit his distant "Cathay" (China), and that goodliest island of "Cipango" (Japan), where the soil literally sparkled with rubies and diamonds, pearls were as plen-tifnl as pebbles, and gold was found in the form of mountains rather than nuggets, had not a little stimulated at once the lovers of adventure and of lucre. Whether young Christopher had perused the glowing pages of the Venetian voyager we are not informed. Yet it may be conjectured with the highest degree of probability that he had. At the close of his first voyage he affirmed that he had returned from "Cipango." In a letter written in 1504 he says: -- "I reached, on the 13th of May, the province of Mango, which is contiguous to that of Cathay. From Ciguara, in the country of Veragua, it is only ten days' journey to the Ganges." Reference to the map of Behaim will show that our navigator considered himself to have been, at the time specified, on the northern shores of China, somewhere near the district lying to the north of the tropic of Cancer, which is assigned to the "konig," or king, "Von Mangi." The mere fact that Columbus gives to the lands which he visits the names of countries described by Marco Polo, is tolerable strong circumstantial evidence that he was in search of those regions. If, however, the fables of travellers did not give color and character to his enterprise, there were facts of a very palpable and aggestive order which could not but operate powerfully upon his mind. No state had exercised more influence in European politics. for the space of a hundred and fifty years, than the diminutive republic of Venice. Her doges were emperors; they figure as the great interventionists of their day; her merchants were princes; her dwellings were palaces. Before the gorgeous portal of San Marco stood the banner-poles that once had borne the standards of Cyprus, Candia, and Morea. When Mohammed II was threatening Constantinople, the last of the imperial race of Byzantium sent, in his emergency, ambassadors to beg the aid of the city of waters. Venice was recognized as the sovereign of the seas. The annual mystic marriage of the Adriatic was far from being a meaningless ceremony. And the cause of this was no mystery. Venice had been for hundreds of years the entrepot for the European trade with India. Upon the bosom of the Canal Giudeca rocked argosies fraught with the fine-spun produce of the looms of Cashmere, the glittering yield of Golconda's mines. the spices, perfumes, and dyes gathered on the banks of the sacred Ganges.

Even now the swarthy belie of many an Egyptian village bears unwitting testimony to the commercial supremacy once enjoyed by the Queen of the Adriatic. No more goodly ornament does she boast than the string of Venetian sequins which crowns her brow. The coin of the republic was the recognized standard of pecuniary value, the medium through which the hostility of the Ishmaelite was converted into commercial urbanity.

The kingdoms of Spain and Portugal were quite capable of appreciating the advantages derived by their more fortunately situated of the Claims of Columbus," by Rev. Mr. Maury, we quote as follows: --

That Columbus was the originator of tha idea that hitherto unknown lands were to be found by steadily sailing westward cannot for a moment be maintained. The truth is that neither he nor any of his contemporaries ever expected to find unknown lands at all. The story of his arguing for the existence of a balancing continent is furniel on a militar.

Alexandrian. For the sea-board nations of Western Europe this was the great commercial problem of the day. It suggested, it gave character, to all their geographical enterprise

And it was the design of Columbus to solve this problem. So far was he from conceiving of any necessity for the existence of a balancing continent, hitherto unknown, that never. to the end of his days, did he even dream of the possibility of the existence of such a continent. He seems to have supposed-at least he strenuously, not to say indignantly, claims -that his achievement has been to reach the shores of India, and the regions described in Marco Polo's letters of gold. An extant letter written by him, in the year 1500, contains the assertion that "if any one does not give him credit for having discovered the remaining parts of India, it simply arises from personal hostility" towards him. In a letter addressed by him to Pope Alexander, in 1502, only four years before his death, he says, venturing largely upon the meagre geographical information of his Holiness: "I discovered fourteen hundred islands and three hundred and thirty-three leagues of the coast of Asia." Over these islands it becomes us to cast the decent veil of charityunless, indeed, we allow ourselves to suppose that our worthy navigator always kept a reminiscence of Madeira in sight. Rut what of his statement regarding the 333 leagues of Asiatic coast? The claim to have made this discovery, aside from certain obvious moral inferences, which it not very feebly suggests. compels the conclusion that this, which, of course, he never did at all, was what he had always desired to do.

-W. S. Turner sends us Arthur's Lady's Home Magazine and The Children's Hour for February, both of which are nicely illustrated and contain much entertaining literary matter adapted to the wants of readers of all ages.
