Foreign Affairs. -Bismarck is again quite ill.

-Paris is represented as being quite gloomy again. -The Prussian Diet will probably close its sessions on the 18th instant.

-The Pope intends to recognize the new Spanish dynasty at an early date. There has been an apportionment made of the war contributions levied upon Paris by the Parisians. -There have been many imperialists, both of the Bonsparte and Orleans factions, elected in France. -The duration of the armistice will probabably be extended, so the Assembly may have time to perfect the work of restoration.

-Preparations are being made by the Prussians for a vigorous bombard nent of Paris should France resolve on the rejection of peace.

Domestic Affairs.

-The American schooners A. H. Wonson and A. J. Franklin were yesterday condemned and forfeited to the Queen, at Halifax, for a violation of the fishing laws.

-The Legislature of Nebraska adjourned over until the 1st of March, and during the recess a committee will investigate charges that have been made against the Governor of the State.

-The anxiety on the part of the public for news of the safety of the steader Tennessee, with the San Domingo Commission on board, is rapidly increasing, and many fear that there will never be any further tidings of the vessel.

-The Rev. Merritt Fowler, wife, and three children, who were victims of the recent dreadful accident on the Hudson River Railroad, were buried yesterday afternoon from their late residence, New London, Conn., and the services of the occasion were unusually solemn.

THE RAILWAY DISASTER.

Latest Information Gienned-Progress of the Coroner's Investigation.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Feb. 10. -At the inquest today Daniel Carroll testified as follows: -I reside at Old Troy, south of New Hamburg drawbridge; I am night watchman and switchman at the station; I was on watch at seventeen minutes past eleven P. M. on Monday, looking out for the up express, which was due at nine minutes past ten; I looked at the middle of the oil train and saw fire flashing among the axles; I knew it was a broken sxie, and ballooed to the boys to keep out of the way; then the broken wheel hopped from the track, seventy-nine rods north of the drawbridge; I followed the engine down, to signal the motioning my light; the engineer seeing could get no answer, I then ran back to the conductor in the caboose; I hallooed, "There is a wheel off the track; put on your brakes as tight as you can; "two men came out and put on the brakes; I knew the express car was overdue, and heard it coming this side of the low point; I could do nothing to stop it; there is a light kept on the drawbridge tower all winter, and men have charge of it; the light was there that night, a white light, indicating "all right," and it remained till it was burned down; men are kept there to look out for it; I was standing north of the station when the oil train passed, and when I notified the conductor of the caboose; it was a cold night; it is eighty rods from the station to the drawbridge, and eighty rods from the drawbridge to the water-tank south at Old Troy; the tower signal is used only for signalling the opening or closing of the draw; I have been night watchman at New Hamburg twenty-one years.

Cornelius Roe sworn-Was engineer of the oil train; my attention was first called to the accident on my train when I reached tha treatle work on the bridge, to stop at the water tank at Old Troy; then I felt a shock; looked and saw the train was separated; I ballooed to the brakeman on the car next to the engine and said, "Don't pull no breaks on me; the rear of the train will run into me;" I then heard some one hallooing toward the rear of the train; I grabbed a red light, and did not stop to look back, as I saw the express coming, and I ran down the track; I met the flagman just above his shanty, and said, "For God's sake, put out that white light and get a red one and come with me;" the express was half a mile below me when I left my engine; I ran two hundred feet from where my engine stood to the flagman's station; we ran about forty rods below the latter when he met the express; we were signalling all the while; the express was coming at full speed; they blowed their whistle just as I got off the engine; I saw no signal from the rear of my train before I stopped, nor did my fireman; I don't think a cord would have rung my bell on that train;

I gave one whistle for brakes, expecting to stop for water; I must have shut off when the signal was given though I did not see it; I shut off for water.

At the evening session Pearner Van Sicken testified-I saw the baggage car fall; just before that I saw a man come out on the rear platform of it; he leaped to the platform of the Buffalo car, and took hold of the knob of the door; he went in about one-quarter of the way; I mean about one-quarter of the way of the car, as I judge, when the car on the north end of it, which he went in, settled down gradually; then the whole bridge seemed to give way, that part under the south end of the car first; afterwards I saw a man pulled out in about the same place; I saw no flames about it when I went down; I was on the iceboat about a hundred feet from it; the Buffalo car was on the treatle work; the baggage car was already down; when the Buffalo car commenced to go down I hallooed to my companions, "Look at that man;" when the north end of the Buffalo car went down it appeared to go down straight; the man I saw go into the car had a cap on with a square front; it looked like the caps worn by sleepingcar conductors; the express was going rapidly and the engine was exhausting as though she was reversed with steam on,

J. M. Toucey, Superintendent of the Hudson River Road, testified in regard to the rules of the road. The only point elicited was that the use of bell ropes on the train, which the rules required, was neglected, but he thought no time was lost in signalling danger on that account.

The inquest adjourned until Thursday, February 16. Up to 11 o'clock to-night nothing new has taken place at the wreck.

WAR NEWS BY MAIL.

ENGLISH NEUTRALITY. M. GUIZOT ON THE FRENCH SITUATION-LETTER

TO MR. GLADSTONE. In the long letter which M. Guizot has addressed to Mr. Gladstone, he holds that the valuable principle of neutrality is capable of a much wider application than it has yet received. Why should not the two banks of the Rhine cease to be a standing menace to France and Prussia, and cease throughout a given length and breadth to bristle with fortresses and caunons? There can be no doubt that if such a stipulation is really just and valuable it must be reciprocal; Mayence and Landau must be dismantled, as well as Strasbourg and Metz. Nothing could give a more certain proof that both France and Prussia are anxious to secure a real and lasting peace." The second great means of preserving peace, according to M. Guizot, is "the maintenance of the balance of power in Europe, and the value of congresses and conferences of the great powers to maintain or re-establish this equilibrium." That the work of different congresses (to which he refers) has been faulty and defective, and that medicerity and petty feeling have had a large share in them, M. Guizot is well aware. I am equally certain," he says, "that the bal-ance of power in Europe has always been, and will always be in principle, just, reasonable, and liberal; and that on the whole its results have been most favorable both to peace and progress throughout Europe." M. Guizot closes with an appeal to Mr. Gladstone to take up the cause of the balance of power and the maintenance of peace in Europe: Will you not (he asks) defend them against ambi-tious despots and conquerors? Surely in the nine-teenth century this would be the grand, the natural, and the historic duty of England. For fifteen years, in your noble struggle on their behalf, you had France for an adversary; for the future, may I not rather say now, you have her as an ally. Modern France has had her feverish dreams of ambilion and conquest. She has paid dearly for them, and a dark fate still frowns upon her: the sins of her past are visited upon her when their season is over, when they only seemed to recur for a moment, that she might prove she had renounced them. I grant that in this ardent and impetuous nation there are still traces of the old testes and old faults. She is easily led astray by brilliant novelty and by the pomp and glory of arms. Nevertheless, this is not now her real inclination and her true meaning—it is only the movement that still disturbs the surface of the ocean when the tempest is ended. The real and earnest desire of France now is for peace and the development of her fruitful industry. France is a country of assiduous agricultural, industrial, and commercial work; a country in which we find prac-tical and scientific civilization, a strong vitality, and yet love of peace. She now wants time to reap the fruit of her past experience, and to learn the value of that political freedom for which she has not ceased to sigh for three-fourths of a century, although she has never known how to use it or to keep it. In such a pat ral and valuable ally. In such a path England is her most natu-

BISMARCK AND FAVRE. BISMARCK'S REFUSAL TO PASS M. FAVRE TO

LONDON. The Spener Gazette publishes the text of M. Favre's request for a safe conduct to enable him to attend the London Conference, and of Count Bismarck's reply:-

M. Favre to Count Bismarck. Paris, Jan. 13 .- Lord Granville has informed me in his despatch of the 29th of December, 1870, which I received on the evening of the 10th of January, that your Excellency, at the request of the English Cabinet, has placed at my disposal a safe conduct, which is necessary for the Plenipotentiary of France at the London Conference, in order that he may be able to pass the Prussian lines. As I am mentioned in that capacity, I have the honor to request you to forward the safe conduct in my name as soon as possible. Accept, etc., JULES FAVEE.

Count Bismarck to M. Jules Favre, VERBAILLES, Jan. 26. I beg your Excellency, in reply to your two letters of the 13th instant, to allow me to clear up a misunderstanding. Your Excellency assumes that, on the proposal of the Government of Great Britain, a safe conduct is ready for you in order that you should take part in the London Conference. This assumption is not correct. I could not enter upon an official negotiation, the basis of which is the presupposition that the Government of the National Defense is internationally in the position of being able to negotiate in the name of the French people until at least it has been recognized by the French nation itself. I imagine that the commanders of our advanced posts would have granted your Excellency permission to pass through the German lines had your Excellency requested such permission from the commander of the besieging army. It would not have been within the province of the latter to take into regard the political situation or the object of your journey, and the authorization to pass our lines grauted by the military leaders, which from your standpoint, admits of no question, would have left the ambassador of his Majesty the King in London free in reference to the question whether, according to inter-national law, the declarations of your Excellency are to be regarded as the declarations of your Excellency are to be regarded as the declarations of France, to assume the proper attitude, and on his side find forms by which every prejudging of matters might be avoided. This plan your Excellency has, by your official request for a safe conduct, with the official declaration that the object of your journey was to represent France at the Conference, rendered impossible. The above-men-tioned political considerations, in support of which I refer to the declaration which your Excellency on the 12th inst. officially published, prevent my com-plying with your wish that such a document should the 12th inst. officially published, prevent my complying with your wish that such a document should be forwarded. In communicating this to you I can only leave to you and your Government to sonsider whether any other way can be discovered in which the above-mentioned scraples can be aliayed, and every prejudice arising from your presence in London be avoided. But even if such a plan can be discovered, allow me to ask if it the navisable that your Excellency should leave Paris and your post as a member of the Government there, in order personally to take part in a conference about the Black Ses, at a moment when interests are at stake in Paris which are more important for France and Germany than article 11 of the treaty of 1806. Your Excellency would also leave behind in Paris the diplomatic agents and subjects of neutral States, who have remained, or rather have been detained, there long after they had received permission to pass through the German lines, and who are, therefore, so much the more under the protection and care of your Excellency and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Government de facts. I can, therefore, so are ely suppose that your Excellency, in the critical position of affairs, in the establishment of which you so materially assisted, will deprive yourself of the passibility of co-operating to effect a solution the responsibility of which restrupon your Rathers of the possibility of which restrupon your leaves the passibility of which restrupon your leaves the passibility of which restrupon your self of the passibility of which your self of the passibilit spensibility of which rests upon you V. BISMARCE.

THE CREDIT MOBILIER.

The Motion for a New Trial Overraled Opt-Judge Pearson delivered an opinion in the above mentioned case on Wednesday, in Harrisburg, of which the following are the essential Fourteen reasons have been assigned by the de fendant's counsel for a new trial in this case, all of which have received the careful consideration of the court. Many, as we conceive, are founded on a misconception of the language used in the charge, the meaning of which is quite different from that imputed. It was our desire to carefully follow and carry out the decision of the Supreme Court, which carry out the decision of the Supreme Court, which we took to be a binding exposition of the law of the case. If we have misunderstood or departed from it in any particular, it was through imdvertance or inability to comprehend its meaning, and not by design. The Supreme Court will fairly construe our language, as we have theirs, according to what we believe to be its purport and design. We cannot believe that the jury was missed by anything contained in our charge, nor that we misstated or misapplied the law. If we have, it will doubtless be corrected on a review by the court of last resort. The facts have been submitted to the jury, as we understend from the opinion, as was inory, as we understend from the opinion, as was inended by that tribunal.

It is seriously complained that the court stated to substance to the jury, that when the officers of the Commonwealth found that when dividends were made swong the stockholders of a corporation annually, or half yearly, precisely in the ratio of stock hold by each, they had a right to presume that the same was made out of the profits of the corporathe same was made out of the profits of the corpora-tion, onless that was explained or repelled by proof. We still adhere to that opinion. The books of the company show that the dividends were so made. Whether that was sufficiently explained by proof of the transactions between Mr. Ames, the trustees, and the Credit Mobilier, and the presumption thereby and the Credit Mobiller, and the presumption thereby repelled, was fairly left to the jury.

In presenting a calculation of the claim to the jury, the counsel for the Commonwealth, as we conceive, fell into a material error by including the sum of $26,477:30 as due under the 3d section of the act of April 7, 1870. At the time this act was passed the defendant had sought redress by writ of error, against what it considered as unjust, and what proved to be an illegal, judgment. The act is extremely penal, and, as we conceive, was intended to apply to those who withhald her just dues from the State. There were thousands of cases to which the law could apply without affecting spits pending. the State. There were thousands of cases to which the law could apply without affecting swits pending. This claim was introduced in the hurry of business at the close of a protracted trial, without the knowledge of the court, and has been allowed by the jury erroneously, as we conceive. The Commonwealth must therefore remit the sum of $26,477.30 from the amount of the verdict, else a new trial must be granted. On the sum being remitted by the counsel, judgment will be entered on the verdict. John J. Pranson,

The verdict was for $635,868:33. The counsel for the Commonwealth remitted the $26,477:30, and judgment was entered for the Commonwealth for

A new transcontinental scheme of communication is proposed. The Trustees of the Vermont Central Railroad have purchased all the boats and other property of the Northern Transportation Company, on the great lakes running from Ogdensburg to Duluth, Minn., where they will connect with the new Northern Pacific Railway. The plan is generally commended in Vermont, and will lead to important results.

-In an unhappy hour a Cleveland judge ventured to argue the point with a female advocate of woman's suffrage. A local paper tells the result. 'His ready antagonist met him squarely at every point, answering him in the most clear and decided manner, nearly all the ladies present reinforcing her continually."
