WHIST AND WHIST PLAYERS.

Aggregate......158,983

A writer in the London Quarterly Review

It would be vain to attempt to describe all the infinite varieties of bad play; but it may be useful to give a few of its most salient characteristics, and this we may do by dividing whist-players into four classes, with, however, the proviso that such a classification must be only approximate, and far from ex-haustive in the lower grades.

Beginning with the worst, the fourth class appears to have derived their ideas of playing from certain oral traditions, which, though widely spread, and doubtless of great antiquity, it is difficult to trace to any definite origin. Probably they may be the handing down of the rudest practice in the infancy of the game. We have, as a matter of curiosity, paid some attention to the habits of this class, and the following may be taken as a summary of their chief rules, which, we believe, now appear in print for the first time:—

'If you have an ace and king of any plain suit, lead them out at once. If not, lead from the best card you hold, in the hope of making it some time; or lead a single card for

"But if fortunately your partner has led before you, you have only to return his lead, and need not take the trouble of scheming a lead of your own. "Never lead trumps, even if led first by your partner; it is wasting them, as they might make tricks by trumping.

In all other cases, do the best you can."

The only idea of skill possessed by these players is in recollecting the high cards that are out, and in discovering when the partner is likely to be short of a suit, that they may force him to trump; they are quite indifferent as to the play of sequences and small cards, and wonder at anybody attaching importance to such trifles. This class forms the great mass of domestic players; they are generally very fond of the game, and practice it a great deal; but their improvement is almost hopeless, as it is so hard to get them to take the first step-i. c., to unlearn everything they already know. The third class are more deserving of respect. They have probably belonged originally to the fourth class, but by reading "Hoyle" or "Matthews," or some of the old books, aided by careful attention, practice, and natural ability, they have risen much above it, and have acquired, in domestic circles, the reputation of being superior players. They are very observant, recollect and calculate well, draw shrewd inferences as to how the cards lie, and generally are adepts in all the accidental features of good play. Their management of trumps is diametrically opposed to that of the fourth class, as they have a great penchant for leading them, a course almost always advantageous for them with inferior adversaries. But skilful as these players are, they commit, as Deschapelles says, "one long and continual fault which they do not see," they are "forts joueurs qui sont de detestables partenaires." They do not play upon system; they will not conform to the conventional language of the game; and hence they lose the great advantage of the combination of their own with their partners' hands. They, indeed, usually object to systems altogether, arguing that the play should be dic-tated by their own judgment. A player of this class will often lead from short suits, or will lead trumps when weak, or abstain from leading them when strong, or will even refuse to return his partner's lead in them; or, in fact, will adopt any other mode of playing for his own hand alone, "the worst fault," says Mr. Clay, "which I know in a whistplayer."

We lately saw a fatal instance of the evil of this style of play. A good player of this class opened by leading the king of spades, which he followed by the queen. His partner, a systematic player, who had originally the ace and two small ones, with four trumps, gave him credit for the knave, and probably one or two others; he therefore put the ace on the queen, to get it out of his partner's way, then succeeded in drawing all the trumps, and returned the third little spade. The original player had no more, and the advergance brought in several carded the suit and saries brought in several cards of the suit and won the game. If players of this class knew how easily they might step into the rank of first-class adepts by simply adopting the orthodox system, they might be induced to devete a few hours to its acquisition; but the great obstacle to their improvement is the pride they take in their own skill, which they object to make subservient to a set of rules, and, per-haps, in some instances, to the will of a partner inferior to themselves. The second class are those who play according to correct system, but who, from want either of practice or of talent, do not shine in individual skill. This is generally the case with the young who are properly taught, and their number is happily increasing every day. Two such players would un-questionably win over two much superior adversaries of the third class; and they make such admirable partners that a fine player, working with one of them, would of himself realize almost the full advantage of the combination of the hands. This class are emi-nently bopeful; they are already entitled to the name of good, sound players, and if they have only moderate abilities, they must continually improve. The first or highest class are those who, to the soundness and system of the second class, add the personal skill of the third. They then become fine players, and, although there may be among them many grades of excellence, they may as a class be said to have arrived at the summit of the scale.
