Evening Telegraph

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1871.

THE NEWS OF THE ARRIVAL OF THE TENNESSEE.

No modern daily journal can be rendered acceptable to intelligent readers if it fails to furnish an abundant supply of fresh, accurate, and comprehensive news. In vain will editors comment, poets sing, wits pun, er critics criticize, if the public is not promptly supplied with the latest foreign and domestic intelligence. In view of this well known fact, we have at great expense, for months past, published, exclusively among the evening or afternoon journals, the news gathered from all parts of the world by the Associated Press.

The superiority of the intelligence furnished by this agency is not only made manifest by the fact that all the old, well-established, leading daily journals of the country support it, and obtain from it their telegraphic news, but by numerous practical demonstrations. To a long list of such demonstrations, which have been given heretofore, another was added yesterday. The absorbing topic was the safe arrival of the steamer Tennessee in a Dominican port. A variety of circumstances had combined to invest the fate of that vessel with profound and universal interest. National politics, the safety of some of the most important men in the nation, as well as that of some of our own citizens and of a gallant crew, hinged on her arrival; and such painful anxiety had been created that the Press of this morning, in commenting upon the reception of the news yesterday, says that "the streets, for the first time in many years, presented as happy a spectacle as they did when the welcome news of Lee's surrender was telegraphed over the wires, now nearly seven years ago." At an early hour yesterday morning a despatch was received announcing, in general terms, the safe arrival of the Tennessee, and this, so far as we know, was all the news of any consequence appertaining to its arrival that was furnished direct to any afternoon journal in Philadelphia, except THE EVENING TELEGRAPH, Although this brief announcement was very cheering, the public naturally thirsted for confirmatory details, for, in their absence, the first despatch was regarded as too vague a rumor to serve the needed purpose of making assurance doubly sure. Yet the Philadelphia reading public would have looked in vain for any such details if THE EVENING TELEGRAPH had not obtained them from the Associated Press. At an early hour we received and published in our second edition a very comprehensive despatch, giving full details of the arrival, reception, and movements of the United States Commissioners at Santo Domingo City, and this despatch supplied not only the gratifying intelligence to the citizens of Philadelphia in general, but also to our amiable afternoon contemporary, the Evening Bul. letin, in particular; for, in its third edition it copied, verbatim, the despatch we had received, printing in display lines, as sub-heads, the phrases selected for such distinction in this office, so that the ear-marks of the conveyed despatch are plain to every newspaper reader. The Bulletin did not claim that this important despatch was received from the American Press Association, whese praises it has so often sung, nor from a special correspondent, but it was not generous enough to ascribe the despatch to its true source, or to acknowledge its own indebtedness to the Associated Press it has so often denounced. This plain statement of facts scarcely needs any comment to bring into strong light the superiority of the Associated Press news, the inferiority of the facilities possessed by the American Press Association, and the straits to which our afternoon contemporary is subjected in its attempts to keep up with the times. We do not object to the Bulletin copying our despatches, especially when they relate to topics of such great importance, for is better that its readers should be posted through our aid than that they should remain ignorant of great national events. Nor do we even ask that the Bulletin should credit the despatches it transfers from our early editions to its late editions; but surely it is not too much to request that it should cease to denounce and underrate the news agency from which it gains its information, second-handed, at epochs when the deficiencies of the American Press Association become painfully manifest.

THE PAYMENT OF THE ALABAMA

CLAIMS. RUMORS from Washington intimate with more or less exactness that there is a strong disposition among certain members of Congress not to accede to any settlement of our difficulties with Great Britain which does not include a surrender to the United States of at least a large slice of the British territory upon this continent. Mr. Sumner especially is said to have become remarkably enthusiastic upon this point, and to be more than ever disposed to push his theory of sentimental damages to a practical conclusion. It is only a few weeks ago that Mr. Sumner, with considerable vehemence, declared that we already had more territory than we know what to do with, and that it was folly to attempt the acquisition of more. Circumstances, however, alter cases with Mr. Sumner, as they do with most men. Then he was endeavoring to defeat the annexation of San Domingo, which is a pet project with President Grant, who had refused to retain Mr. Sumner's protege Motley as Minister at the British court. Besides this San Domingo would be a Southern acquisition, and Mr. Sumner has never forgiven the South for slavery sufficiently for him to look with favor upon any project that might possibly add anything to Southern strength. If we except Vancouver's Island, however, and the territory in the immediate neighborhood of Paget Sound, which the Northern Pacitie Railroad has greatly enhanced in value, San J. C. Garrigues & Co., No. 608 ARCH Street. 11

Domingo will in all probability be worth far more to us than any of the British possessions on this continent, except Canada. If the commission can settle the Alabama claims by ceding to us a large section of territory, especially that portion of Western British North America that will enable us to command the entire Pacific coast, we believe that the arrangement will be entirely satisfactory to the people of the United States, but it is certainly bad policy, at least for Senato declare that they will agree to any settlement not but this. In all our negotiations with Great Britain heretofore we have yielded far more than we ought, and there is scarcely a doubt that the fifty-four-forty-or-fight controversy would have been settled entirely in our favor if we had obstinately determined to carry our point. It will not do, however, to play a losing game this time, and any bargain that may be effected between the commissioners about to sit at Washington must insure us good measure, or it will not be accepted by the people. It is not worth our while in this affair to yield anything for the sake of maintaining friendly relations with Great Britain; and as Great Britain has been the aggressor, so must she expect to pay the penalty. It is neither proper nor diplomatic, however, for the United States or any of its representatives to declare that they will only agree to one form of settlement, and such expressions as are credited to Senator Sumner will be far more likely to prevent than to aid in the negotiation of a treaty that will bring a number of unpleasant controversies between the United States and Great Britain to an advantageous conclusion. While we have a right to exact heavy damages for the injuries we have suffered, and while it is not worth our while to make any settlement that will not be entirely to our advantage, it certainly is desirable that our difficulties with Great Britain should be definitely concluded; and as the appointment of the commission has given satisfaction on both sides of the Atlantic, it should be allowed to perform its duties without any unnecessary embarrassment.
