From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Feb. 23, 1871.-Poor Henry Berkeley! To recommend the ballot year after year to a House of careless Gallios, and then pass off the stage of life just too soon to see his hobby adopted into the Government studwas ever man more unlucky? The bill just introduced by Mr. Forster could not have been placed in better hands. He is unquesat the present moment, has the greatest talent for conciliating foes without deserting friends, and his measure was welcomed last Monday with a chorus of approbation that augurs well for its success. The points for which his Ballot bill claims special credit is its combination of simplicity with secrecy. A voter entering the polling-booth will give in his name, and then, and not till then, receive from the presiding officer a voting paper marked with a secret stamp, which he will have to fill up and deposit in the ballot-box before he leaves the booth. Of course none but the official voting papers will count for anything, and a voter will find it impossible to prove to any one how he has voted. The mechanical contrivance seems perfect, but will the public consent to rely implicitly on the seeming perfection of a mechanical contrivance? If the protection of those troops was really felt to be needed last autumn at the New York elections, it is hard to answer

Eight millions sterling is a tolerably large sum to pay even for the removal of an abuse, but we are going to pay it, and without grumbling too, to rid our army of the odious system of promotion by purchase. Mr. Cardwell, Secretary for War, has quite taken the wind out of the Army Reformers' sails by coming forward with a scheme for the reorganization of our military ferces far more comprehensive and thorough-going than his best friends would have given him credit for, and the consequence has been that on the Irreconcilables, led by Mr. Trevelsyan, moving (as I foretold you) a resolution aimed at the permanence of our royal Commander-in-Chief's position, they have been outvoted by a majority of 201 to 83. All the thanks that the ardent, ambitious Trevelyn got for his pains was to be styled a young man of extraordinary industry, who had fallen a melancholy victim to petty larceny committed by the War Office, and had his brains picked of | is the only sure way to stamp it out. a fine scheme. Still he hit a blot in attacking the useless expense of our so-called household cavalry. 1832 privates, at an average yearly cost of $570, gold, apiece, forming a body too heavy for a royal escort and not wanted for | The cars at present used are brought readypolice purposes, why should they cumber the ground?

This is our decennial census year, and preparations are well advanced for the smooth performance of the operation. On the 27th of March a schedule will be delivered to every occupier in the kingdom. The name, sex, age, and occupation of every soul alive at midnight on April 2 are to be declared, and the papers collected in the course of the following day by an army of enumerators, whose lists will pass through the hands of registrars aud superintendent registrars to the Census Office before the month is out, and very shortly afterwards, if all works as well as in 1861, be given to the world. You are not yet a hundred years old, and are dissatisfied with a sum total of over eight-and-thirty millions: we have been a dozen centuries growing, and hardly expect our millions to prove more than thirty. That's a pretty dense population, after all, though, for a place about the size of New York State.

The Joint High Commission is exciting a great deal of interest, despite the all-engrossing topic of the war, and almost every night some question is asked about it in Parliament. On Tuesday a Mr. Macfie, asking whether there was any truth in a rumor he had heard that the United States proposed to buy us out of Canada, got a deservedly severe answer from the Prime Minister. "I hope," said Gladstone, "that while negotiations are in progress the honorable member will not think it necessary to ask questions in this House founded on mere anonymous authorities." Tom Hughes' Anglo-American Association have opportunely brought out a temperate pamphlet on the history and present position of the fisheries question. A copy has been sent to each member of the Joint Commission, and as it is published by the ubiquitous firm of Macmillan, it will no doubt find some readers on your side of the water. Whether it is possible in the nature of things for one of the parties to an argument to state the question at issue in a form which the other party will accept without reserve, I don't know; but I think all readers will admit that the fisheries pamphlet has at any rate honestly attempted to avoid national bias and coloring. Our journals seem to be forming a very sanguine estimate of the amount of work which the commission may be leoked to to accomplish. Not only is it to put every question between you and us, past, present, and possible, in train for settlement, but it must lay down the law on points of international morality for the world at large. Last night's Globe, for instance, thinks that England and North America ought to take the lead in establishing clear rules as to the relations between neutrals and belligerents-rules whereby neutrals may avoid giving offense, with a minimum

When things have got to such a pass that, as last year, a couple of important bills block the line of Parliament for a whole session, and in the same space of time a single private member is found to have addressed the House one hundred and sixteen times, on forty-one different subjects, it is high time that a committee should be appointed, as has just been done, to devise methods for the more expeditious despatch of public business. The practice of putting silly questions to the Government must certainly be checked. This very evening a distinguished baronet is going to ask the Chanceller of the Exchequer "whether it is true that the officers of customs have received instructions to offer every facility for the adulteration of wines in bond, provided the owners declare that such adulteration is for the purpose of fortifying the wines?" Mr. Lowe's notoriously sharp tongue may be trusted to find an exemplary answer. There's no denying it. No daily paper in the world has ever reached such a circulation as the London Daily Telegraph can now claim. Its printers' and publishers' books have been examined by a well-known firm of tionably the man who, of all our politicians public accountants, and they report the number of copies issued during the latter half of 1870 to have been 29,010,035, giving a daily average of more than one hundred and ninety thousand copies. It is enough to make Mr. Bennett, of the Herald, tear his hair with

The Dark Blue, a new high-class illustrated monthly, is to appear in a day or two, and is said to have already secured a publisher in the States. Truly, of making many magazines there is no end, but so many of them are mere trash that this one, which aims at "no padding," and starts with such contributors as Charles Reade, William Morris, and W. M. Rossetti, has a good chance of finding readers. Many of you no doubt will turn with interest to the "Recollections of American Universities" which Tom Hughes begins in the first number—the first printed expression (a few lectures excepted) of the experiences gained in his last autumn's visit.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," and some of our London tradesmen are endeavoring, with remarkably bad taste, to give a commercial tinge to the noble outburst of national sympathy which has voluntarily poured more than £100,000 into a Mansion-House Fund for the relief of Paris. In several grocers' windows nicely cooked hams, biscuits, pots of Liebig's extract of meat, and preserved viands, such as one is tempted by when the Derby Day with its drags and luncheon parties is drawing near, stand prominently in view, while a placard over them announces "Provisions packed for Paris."

· There is a vaccination mania all over the country just at present, and you can hardly take a friend by the arm without his screaming out that he has "taken" and is sore. The doctors are having a glorious time of it, but the demand has been so sudden that they have no small difficulty in providing vaccine for all the applicants. Small-pox is certainly unusually prevalent in London, and vaccination
