RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

Last Year's Casualties in England. The total number of persons killed on rail-ways in England during the year was 286, and the number of injured was 1239. Of these, 90 persons killed and 1094 persons injured, were passengers, and the remainder, 196 killed and 145 injured, were officers or servants of the railway companies, or trespassers, or from accidents at level crossings, or from miscellaneous causes. Of the passengers, 66 were killed and 1084 were injured from causes beyond their own control. The total number of passenger jour-neys having been about 307 000,000, it fol-lows that the proportion of passengers killed was in round numbers one to 3.410,000, and of passengers injured one to 281,000, and that the proportions of passengers killed and injured from causes beyond their own control were respectively one in 4,651,000, and one in 283,000. This was an increase on the average of the previous five years, in which the proportions were one to 13,000,000 killed, and one to 372,000 injured. Of the officers and servants of railway companies there have been killed one out of 1740, and injured one out of 1560; but accidents to servants do not appear, in many cases, to be reported by some of the railway companies; and their numbers would, if the whole truth could be ascerfained, be considerably increased.

AFTER THE WAR.

The Future of the Germans in Paris. The commercial, industrial, and artistic breach between France and Germany, as proclaimed by the French (says the Pall Mall Gazette), must, if maintained, have some very curious results. What will become of the German waiters, German bakers, German tailors, German makers of scientific instruments, German musicians, and German Jews, formerly so numerous in Paris? We have heard it suggested that German waiters, who (as every one who has lived in a German hotel must be aware) are great adepts at bed-making and at housemaid's duty generally, would make good servants of all work, in which capacity numbers of them might find employment in England. In the matter of musicians, the balance is dead against the French. If, henceforth, no French mu-sicians visit Germany, the Germans will not suffer much by that. But if German musicians are to be excluded from France, the want of them will be felt greatly in the French orches tras. What, too, as to German composers? Myerbeer was a rank Prussian, and as great a diplomatist in his way as Bismarck himsel'. To object to Prussians and Prussianism and tolerate Meyerbeer would be a grave piece of inconsistency. As to Offenbach, for-merly a German in Germany, a Frenchman in France, it has now been decided that the unman is to the Germans as a Frenchman. to the French even as a German. He is, indeed, a Frenchman by naturalization, a German by birth. He belongs, then, to neither of the two countries, and might appropriately take up his residence in that part of Lorraine which for the clared French or German, according to the de-clared French or German, according to the deci-sion of the conference. After that he could emigrate to the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg.
