OF NEW BOOKS. REVIEW

-"The Daughter of an Egyptian King," translated from the German of George Ebers, by Henry Reed, is an attempt to give a picture of society at the centres of civilization five hundred years before the Christian era. The author is a disciple of Lepsius, whose expedition to Egypt he accompanied, and he now holds the position of Director of the Museum at Jena. "The Daughter of au Egyptian King" describes the marriage of an Egyptian princess with the heir-apparent of the Persian throne, and it introduces a vast number of descriptive details, for the purpose of giving the reader an idea of the characteristics of the Greek, Egyptian, and Persian civilizations. The story itself possesses considerable interest, but its greatest value is in the antiquarian research which infustrates its pages, and in the elaborate descriptions of the manners, customs, arts, sciences, etc., which are given not merely to depict the civilizations of Greece, Egypt, and Persia, but to show the differences that existed between them. Published by J. B. Lippincott & Co.

-"Success and its Conditions" is the title of a series of essays by Mr. Edwin P. Whipple, which have been collected from the various periodicals in which they have appeared during the last twenty-five years. The essays are twelve in number, and the author has attempted in them to state the vital conditions of success, briefly and pointedly, and with an avoidance of "the madness of extremes." Mr. Whipple is one of the most thoughtful and forcible essayists we have, and the contents of this volume are well worthy of the attention of the young men of the country. Published by J. R. Osgood & Co. For sale in this city by Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger.

-"Life and Death," by a writer who subscribes himself "Your Humble Servant," is a curious story which professes to give a picture of certain phases of New York life. There is some very pointed satire on Wall street, the women's righters, and the general demoralization that exists in certain classes of society, and a plot of considerable ingenuity engages the attention of the reader from first to last. "Life and Death" appears to be the work of either an inexperienced or a very careless writer, and it is disfigured by numerous inelegancies and extravagances. Notwithstanding these, however, it is a story of real power, and will repay a perusal. Published by Carleton, and for sale in this city by Porter & Coates.

-From T. Ellwood Zell we have received the first number of "Zell's Descriptive Hand Atlas of the World," by J. Bartholomew. This work proposes to furnish the public with a cheap, elegant, and accurate atlas which will contain all the latest improvements. The maps in the number before us are handsomely engraved, and by a system of indexing, which is beautifully simple, those using the atlas will be able to find any place they may desire without any difficulty. This is a very important feature, which will of itself commend this atlas to the public. This atlas is designed as a supplement or companion to "Zell's Popular Encyclopedia," and it will be completed in twenty-five numbers, at fifty cents a number. In case the number of parts exceed twenty-five, the extra ones will be furnished subscribers gratis. -"The Fight at Dame Europa's School," published by Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, is a reprint of a lively piece of satire that created considerable sensation in England a few months ago. The writer is evidently a Tory among the Tories, and his object is to reflect upon the English boy who did not interfere at the proper moment to put a stop to the fight.

THE MAGAZINES. "BARPER'S," The April number of Harper's Magazine, which has been sent us by Claxton, Remsen & Hafelfinger contains the following articles:-

Guernsey, with thirteen illustrations; "Bowery, Saturday Night," by W. O. Stoddard, with thirteen illustrations; "Frederick the Great, XVII, The Close of the Seven Rears' War, and the Partition of Poland," with five illustrations; 'John Eastman's Compensation," by Miss Emma B. Holder, with ten illustrations; "Anna Vallayer-Coster," by Benson J. Lossing, with a portrait; "My Hero," by Annie Thomas; "Dominic and the Inquisition," by Eugene Lawrence; "The Mumtion," by Eugene Lawrence, of Theophile my's Foot," from the French of Theophile U.S. Conant: "Our Gautier, by Mrs. H. S. Conant; "Our French Allies;" by Benson J. Lossing; "Eh! What Is it?" by J. H. Connelly; "Editor's Easy Chair;" "Editor's Literary Record;" "Editor's Scientific Record;" "Editor's His-torical Record;" "Editor's Drawer."

From "Bowery, Saturday Night," by W. O. Stoddard, we take the following sketch of the Bowery in olden times:-

Let no unlettered rustic win derision to himself by calling this great thoroughfare Bowery street, for it is "The Bowery," and nothing more. In the good old days when the memory of Hendrick Hudson and due reverence for "their High Mightinesses" of Amsterdam had not yet departed from Mana-batta, stout-hearted and hard-headed old Governor Peter Stuyvesant had his Bowwerie, or country seat, out this way, and the highway thereto, out of proper respect, derived its imperishable name therefrom.

In some of the earlier maps, to be sure, prepared by presumptuous Yankees or usurping Englishmen, the Governor's drive is degraded to "the high-road to Boston," as if New Yorkers cared what settlements bordered on their highway after it had departed from the incomparable island. In the maps of 1766 a better spirit is manifested by the super-scription "Bowery Lane;" and in 1806 it was noted as the "Bowery Road," connecting near what is now Union Square with the "Bloomingdale Road," and continuing its career higher up as the "road to Boston." On most of the later maps there is no attempt to add useless appendages to the simple and sufficient cognomen.

In those ancient and excellent days of pastoral simplicity, on the left, as you went north from Chatham Square, lay the estate of the Le Lanceys, and above them the broad lands of Dyckman and Brevoort, while on the right the old records give us the historic names of Rutgers, Bayard, Minthorne, Van Cortlandt, and others; and beyond and exceeding these were the Bouwerie and other possessions of the Stuyvesants, who have left more traces of their ownersnip and occupancy than all others put together-partly because the family yet retain much of the property, but more because of the bad temper of the old Governor, and the preposterously long life of the "Stuyvesant pear-tree," at the corner of Thirteenth street. There can be little room for doubt in the mind of any devout antiquarian but that the spirits of the sturdy old burgomasters of Nieuw Amsterdam continue to tutelize their old haunts, and have exercised a material influence in determining the character and nationality of their successors; nor would it be altogether difficult at the present day to find, on some pleasant summer evening, sitting with his "'vrauw" or gossip in front of some Bowery halle or garten, the modern representative of "Hard Koppig Peter" and his bellicose neighbors. Solid and sturdy men were they-sturdy and solid men are these good and honest citizens, and as eager for news of fatherland and the stirring deeds of "unser Fritz" as were their prototypes for the slow-coming tales of the prowess of Van Tromp and De Ruyter. Not even the news by telegraph and the street railways can deny to the properly-constituted mind the privilege of recognizing the flavor of the old times in what we assume to be the new.

Close by the roadside, on an eminence commanding a prospect far and wide over the plains, stood a sandstone monolith, which, to the seeker after the dark ways of character, was a better guide than ever Number Nip was to the wayfarer. It appears that the Duke of Anhalt, on whose territory it stood, some twenty years ago, when his excessive taxes had reduced the people to beggary, was gra-ciously moved in his paternal heart to order the construction of a ducal turnpike, to enable his subjects to keep away the wolf from their cabins. This was all very good and pleasant to a philanthropic mind, but the weak point of the German character appears on this monument, with this legend among others:-"Wanderer, as you pause here, let us joyfully declare to you that Love fashioned this column as a memorial of our lealty to him." If Americans had received government assistance of this sort, perhaps they would have passed a series of resolutions in gratitude, perhaps not, and there the whole matter would have ended. The principal circumstance to be noted in this inscription is that certain something of servility, of adulation and in-cense-burning to sleek rank rather than to starved and penniless genius, that "toomuchness" of loyalty, of which Coleridge accuses the Germans. Compare the German Domkirchen with the cathedrals of Italy. In the latter there are tens of thousands of statues, statuettes, busts, pictures, cartoons, in which the children of genius do each other noble honer above all ribboned potentates; but in German churches there are few grand tombs except to coffin the purple, few sublime frescoes except to celebrate the heroism of lbue blood. How true, how pitifully true, that caustic word of Von Moltke as he stood before the portraits of Bazaine and MacMahon in Versailles!-"I think we Prussian generals have about as much merit as these gentlemen, but, by God! they will not place any of our portraits in a pantheon at Berlin." all nations in Europe the most peaceful and the most unhandsome on a horse, they have the most absurd disproportion of equestrian bronze in their streets. When will Germany cease to worship kings, and build for genius a Chaucer's House of Fame? Who will ever rear the true Walhalla of Germany, wherein shall be gathered her real Einheriar?

What more contemptuous term of reproach in the rest of Europe than "German count!" In their journals they quote the sayings of their great statesmen far oftener than we in America do, but this is merely the tribute of bookworms, the conceit of learning. It is egotism. Egotism and skepticism are one; and it is a curious commentary on the value of most modern skepticism that the most skeptical people of Europe are the most king-worshiping nation. There is a skepticism which is servility itself. A skeptical people can never maintain republican government. They are too absolute-they must push every principle to its ultimate results; none of the imperfect systems which alone, in this fallen world, can be carried on among men will be tolerated by them. They would pick such a government to pieces, and establish in its stead such a hopelessly complicated and Utopian affair as was sought to be made in 1848 in Frankfort. There is no elasticity in the German character, no spirit of compromise, none of our American easy, swinging laisses aller which is indispensable to self-government. The German loses his temper in politics-he

From Mr. Stephen Powers' "Student Rambles in Prussia" we take the following:-

And in this place it is necessary to write a thing which may seem terribly un-American and undemocratic. A vast majority of the masses of the Continent, at least in the country-and that even in Prussia, the most intelligent of nations-are not "sighing for liberty" at all. They do not even know what liberty is. The root of the matter is not found in them. They are dimly conscious, like a linnet hatched in its wicker cage, that something in lacking in their little lives, that "there's somewhat in this world amiss;" but if they long to come to America, an honest analysis of their minds would evolve the unheroic fact that most of them were distinctly conscious of no more elevated purpose than to be able to acquire a more ample quantum of meat and mustard for a smaller outlay of labor. The war between Prussia and Austria was just in its incipiency, the Prussian Government was rapidly mobilizing its regiments and hurling them dowm through Saxony, and the village of Stassfurt was clamorous with belligerent talk. Novertheless, one thing was specially noteworthyto wit, that the disputants always confined themselves to a mention of "Prussia" and "Austria," and never, on a single occasion, allowed themselves to speak of "the king" or 'the emperor," or of any other name standing for living flesh and blood. As they sat around their little tables I thought many times they would certainly fall to tweaking each other's noses. First, one would stand up, lean far across the table, and beat it very earnestly with his fist or strike wildly into the atmosphere, as if in the prosecution of severely personal hostilities against a June-bug; then the other would do the same; then they would both leap up, put their faces close together, and discourse very violently and simultaneously for many moments together.

strikes blindly about him: a German minority always protests. Germans have no patience with political offendera. "Shoet them down like mad dogs!" said Luther of the rebellious peasants.

TRICKS OF THE TYPES.

Serious Results from a Printer's Blunder. The case of Louis A. Salomon vs. Pauline Lesser, calling herself Pauline Salomon, was tried in New York yesterday. The defendant some three years ago married a man of the name of Gustav Lesser. Very soon after this marriage the first husband ran away, and a suit was commenced by her to have the marriage declared vold. The suit was commenced by publication of the summons, and the printers of one paper made it "Leper" in place of "Lesser," the first "s" being written long. The suit was nevertheless carried to a decree, the proof being pretty strong. Subsequently she married the plaintiff, and after living with him about two years brought suit for limited divorce in the Supreme Court, on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment. In this suit she obtained an allowance of $5 a week and $50 counsel tee. Her husband defended the suit, denying the charge of cruelty and setting up that she had a husband living. Not content with this, her husband brought suit in the Common Pleas to have his marriage declared void, for the reason that in the suit of Lesser vs. Lesser no jurisdiction was obtained, and hence no divorce of Mrs. Lesser enabling her to remarry. The case came up on a motion for allmony. The Court thought it could not be allowed in a suit of this kind, though the bringing of this suit might be a reason for increasing the allow-ances in the suit in the Supreme Court. Motion denied.

ABOUT TROUT CATCHING.

The Season at Hand in this State-Important to Anglers.

The Harrisburg Telegraph says :-

The rapidity with which the natural trout streams of this State have been depopulated of this beautiful and delicious fish has rendered stringent legislation necessary. This and neighboring counties have some very prolific trout streams, and to assist in protecting them from unlawful visitations, we annex the following sections of a law passed in April, 1869, now in existence:--

Section six provides that no person shall at any time, with intent so to do, catch any speckled brook trout with any device save only a hook and line, and no person shall catch any trout or have in his or her possession save only in the months of April, May, June, and July under a penalty of five dollars for each trout so caught or had in his possession.

Section nine of the same act provides that it shall be the duty of any constable having know-ledge of the violation of any of the provisions of this act to make report thereof to any Justice of the Peace of the proper county, and any other person having such knowledge may make

All anglers will see at once the propriety of conforming strictly to the law and thus restocking the streams with trout.
