THE COMING DARWINIAN. From Appleton's Journal

One of our city journals, which habitually pays much attention to the leading topics of scientific and intellectual discussion, lately gave its readers a lively sketch of the last gave its readers a lively sketch of the last results of Darwinism in an account of the coming man, that is to say, of man as he will be in the future when the great Darwinian principle of natural selection has perfected its work, and the process of evolution, or de-velopment, has been carried on for a million years or so. The account professes to be based on disclosures of Mr. Darwin's private views and speculations made by an intimate views and speculations made by an intimate friend of the philosopher now in this coun-try on the staff of the English High Com-mission. This imaginary disciple of the great master is made to represent that the chief agent in modifying the coming man will be his diet. Heretofore man has lived upon the vegetable and animal organisms by which he was surrounded. Fraits, plants, and animals have been his diet. But is this and animals have been his dist. But is this necessary? Is it not possible that a food may yet be discovered which, while organic and susceptible of sustaining life, need not necessarily be embodied in any form of vegenecessarily be embodied in any form of vege-table or animal life? In other words, may not synthetic chemistry come to our aid in supplying concentrated food which will replace the bulkier and grosser forms of vegetable and animal aliment? In forms of vegetable and animal aliment? In fact, this is already being done. Immense strides have been made of late years in this direction. Even your grocer deals in ex-tracts of beef and condensed milk and con-centrated coffee, and the druggists are sell-ing chemical food already in the shape of the syrup of hypophosphites. We now are beginning to learn of what chemical constituents our bodies are chemical constituents our bodies are composed. This has been discovered for us by analytic chemistry, and, indeed, nearly all chemistry so far has been analytic. It has disintegrated—it has taken apart nearly, if not quite all, the materials of the universe not quite all, the materials of the universe about us. We now know pretty nearly of what everything about us is composed, but synthetic chemistry is of comparatively re-cent origin, and consists of the putting to-gether of the particles of matter about us and forming new combinations. It is now discovered that chemistry can give us organic matter without the necessity of its having gone through any form of organic life. Uras and through any form of organic life. Urea and a host of other organic materials can be made by chemists. There is no end to the possi-bilities of synthetic chemistry. Now, if in the waste of the human body we can find out the material necessary to repair that waste, clearly we are on the road to getting rid of animal and vegetable food. If the disintegration of our bodies is a matter of pure chemical decomposition, which is discoverable, and if it is possible to put materials together which will repair the waste of our bodies, why may not the chemist take from the inorganic earth about us such materials as he needs, and supply what is required to the reformation of our systems? The German scientists have discovered that there is no thought without phosphorus, and so of all the material which goes to compose our muscles, nerves, bones, fat, etc., we are aware that they are built up from certain constituents about us, and the supplying of those constituents will give us a food which will render unnecessary the slaughter of innocent animals and the eating of gross vegetable products. Eating will then be one perpetual delight, and there will be no more dysyepsia, because nothing will be taken into the system which the system may not appropriate. This will gradually work an important change in the human form. The man of the future, eating a food in which there will be no waste, will have less strain upon his abdominal regions. In time the stomach will shrink, the liver will become smaller, the intestinal canal will diminish and shorten, the kidneys will not be so active or so much used, and will hence decrease in size. The race of "pot-bellied" men, men of huge round paunches, will decrease and pass away, while a race with small abdominal regions, and with their organs of digestion reduced to a minimum, will take their place. At the same time the superior regions of the bedy—the lungs, and especially the brain—under the improved conditions which will exist when this food is being eaten, will enlarge very greatly. Whatever is used most will acquire a constant tendency to increase. As the pow-erful jaw and terrible neck of the lion are increased, generation by generation, while his stomach decreases by his habit of life, so, too, will the tremendous brain of the man, and his vast nervous energy, called into being by this new food, give us a race with huge lungs and of mighty brain-space. The brain will need great blood-vessels to give it strength, and these will create a necessity for deriving an unusual amount of oxygen from the air. In short, the man of the future will have a shrunken belly, a great breast and neck, and a mighty head surmounting all. He will also be without teeth, because he will have no use for them. And, as the infant of the future will be fed on artificial food chemically prepared for its best nourishment, great changes will take place in the female form, which it is not necessary to specify. It will be seen by those who have read "The Origin of Species" and "The Descent of Man," and have mastered the principles of Darwinism, that these speculations as to the man of the future are far more reasonable and plausible, and have much more of a real scientific basis, than Mr. Darwin's theories as to the man of the past. It is but the first step that costs, and, if we admit at all the theory that natural selection rules the universe instead of God, we need not be startled or shocked at any lengths to which it may carry us.

COLONEL CORVIN.

Colonel Corvin, a German gentleman who has led a very stirring and adventurous life, has just published his memoirs, which are very entertaining. Here is one of his adventures: —He was educated at the Prussian Military Academy, but, though he became an officer of the army, he was at heart a democrat, and in 1848 took part in a revolutionary movement against the Government of Baden. It failed, and he was com-pelled to surrender at discretion, and was at once arrested and put in prison as a traitor. once arrested and put in prison as a traitor. Corvin's wife, a brave woman, had accompanied him, as many other wives had accompanied their husbands, on this expedi-tion. Madame Corvin worked heaven and earth, as the phrase goes, forced her way into the presence of the Princess of Prussia, attacked Count Groeben, and was thrust aside as importunate. Before the surrender she was heroic enough to bid her husband "blew out his brains sooner than surrender to the Prussians." But she rejoiced that her advice had not been followed. When she saw him in his prison, she said: — "If you must die, I know you will die like a man." At last his long-deferred trial came round. The Baden Government was dealing with him, Baden Government was dealing with him, yet the court was composed of Prussian officers and sergeants. Colonel Corvin made an eloquent speech of two hours in his own defense, but it was a foregone conclu-sion. He was found guilty, "by five voices to one, condemned to be shot, and to pay the costs." As they drove away past the hotel of the place he haved a cry from a window and the place he heard a cry from a window, and a white hand was waved to him. He was thrust into the condemned cell. It was Saturday; and as no executions were allowed on Sundays, and Monday would be too long a grace, he knew he would be shot that night. About four hours then remained to him. Beside him was a little tumbled litter, from which poor Lieutenant Schad had risen that morning for his sentence. The jailer asked with a sepulchral voice:-

"Would he have anything, or see a clergyman?"

The reply was an order for a good dinner, a good bottle of wine, a dozen cigars, and writing-paper. His gallant wife now arrived. She had forced her way into the grand duke's palace, but he would not see her. With an ingenious cruelty, all the princes, before the insurrection was put down, had divested themselves formally of the prerogative of mercy, and relegated it to the hands of the chief soldiers. When she got to the prison, they had the avecution dinner served which they had the execution dinner served, which was furnished at the expense of the city. She had a little plan for his escape, but he refused to avail himself of it. They were then told that the execution was put off until Monday. So here was a grateful respite. Late at night, however, came the sound of many tramping feet, and two officers called him out to speak to him. She heard their whisperings. It was to tell him that all had been changed, and that he must be ready to be shot at half-past 4 in the morning.

She heard every word. They were to come for her at 3. The agony of the interval may be conceived. The brave woman, however, knew that if she gave way she would only un-nerve him. He held her in his arms all the time; and the only thought that came upon her was, that what she felt so warm and living would, by 5 o'clock, be cold, dead, and inanimate.

At three she was taken away. She knocked the house of some friendly citizens. "They opened to me. After these good people had lain down again at my request, I stood at the open window alone, despairingly watching the coming morning, and listening to every sound. I felt as cold as stone, but I did not lose consciousness. The clock struck one quarter-half-three quarters-four ! He has only one half hour left to him. Then I heard the report of some shots-the people in the house heard them also-and I fell senseless to the ground, as if they had pierced my heart also." What a terribly dramatic pic-

The Poor Men of Newloundland Becom-ing Rich in a Fortnight. A despatch from St. John's, N. F., says:-After a lapse of more than twenty years of general unprogressiveness and poverty, the doll city of St. John's was aroused this morning by a re-port that gladdened every heart and sent a thrill of excitement over the whole island. A steamship, the Nimrod, belonging to Job Brothers & Co., was said to be in the bay, awaiting wind enough to besr her into the harbor of St. John's, as her bollers were unavailable, the bunkers being literally stuffed with seal skins. On her arrival we learned that her pre-cious cargo was 28,000 seals - the largest number ever known to have been captured. Versels and steamships trimmed their rigging with freet - in fact of all sailing crafts the world over. The captain of the Nimrod says, that he left St. John's harbor on the ist nit. On the itre, St. Pa-tick's day, the watch at the masthead gave the wel-come cry, "Seals ahead," wherenpon the firemen were ordered to quicken the fires. In another hour the Nimrod was an island amid an ocean of seals. In six days afterwards she was loaded and bore up to home.

In six days after wards she was loaded and bore up for home. A few hours after the arrival of the Nimrod, the steamsnip Hector hove in sight. Yet a few hours, and we learned the amazing fact that she carried with her 21,560 scals—an amount that in old times would be called a fairy-land tale. The captain of the Hector announces that in the fee off which he loaded, he communicated with more than fifty sall of vessels, all loading or laden. The merchants of St. John's are compelled to extend their premises, and build temporary vats for the rendering of the enormous quantity of oil consigned to them. In the harbor of St. John's there are now eleven arrivals from the seal fishery, and their average catch is $1,000, making the extraordinary total of $41,000 seals, more than the entire catch of any one season, though over a hundred vessels are yet to arrive al St. John's. In Harbor Grace the success of the seal hunters has been equally great. The total catch of four has been equally great. The total catch of for steamships now arrived at that port exceeds 106,0 seals, while 150 vessels belonging there are yet to h scals, while 150 vessels belonging there are yet to b heard from. Each steamship carries about 500 men, and a will make another trip this season—a fact neve previously known. As yet the wages and share of each seal hunter may be estimated at $1500. A this has been earned by the heads of many poor families since March 1. You may expect cheap fur this year, and no dearth of oil for your machiner and manufactories.

the Michigan Central Railroad came around the curve at full speed. wheels of the locomotive, and almost instantly she, powerless to resist, was drawn beneath the train. At the same instant the man seized hold of his doomed companion, with the intention of respue; but the attempt failed, and proved fatal to both, for man and woman were drawn under and crushed to death. The body of the woman was mutilated in a horrible manner, and death ensued almost instantly. The man was injured about the head and internally. He lingered in an insensible condition for an hour, and then breathed his last. The woman seemed to be about twenty-seven years of age. She was attired in a dress of dark blue, a brown chinchilla sacque, triamed with vel-vet, a black velvet hat with white feather, green kid gloves, and jet jewelry, set in gold. She wore a plain gold ring on the third fisger of her left hand, on the inside of which was engraved, "With Edwin's Love." The man appeared to be about thirty years of age. He was dressed in a dark-brown beaver coat, light pants, boots, and a tail hat, inside of which were the initials "E. M."

THE MISSING PENSION OFFICER.

General Lawrence Not Yet Heard From-His Accounts All Right Thus Far. We ascertained, upon inquiry this afternoon, that nothing had yet been heard from General William H. Lawrence, lately United States Pension Agent, in this city, who disappeared on the 15th of last month. His family have concluded that he has been murdered or has met with some other serious mis-hap. The statement that "there is a woman" at the bottom of the mystery is without foundation, so far as we can learn, and probably originated in the fer-ture! The prisoner was quite composed, having faced death very often. He made his little preparations. At dawn he heard footsteps, and the mayor and officers entered.

"I am quite prepared, gentlemen," he said. "No, my friend," said the voice of the counsel who had defended him, "we bring you better news.

The honest lawyer had worked hard through the night; had gone to Carlsruhe and obtained a reprieve. Corvin's sentence was commuted. and he passed six years in penal servitude of the most terrible kind. He was at last released, though his health was utterly shat-tered, and has lived to write these entertaining volumes.

WHAT WOMEN EAT .- Another popular belief is that women eat nothing. It is, of course, conceded that they sustain life by the consumption of some article of nourishment; but eating, in the wholesale acceptation of the word, is supposed to be foreign to female nature. This fallacy is founded and sustained by women themselves, who, during the affected period of their lives, cultivate small appetites, as being comme il faut, and a sign of semi-angelic construction. When this per-nicious nonsense is conscientiously carried out, the results upon the would-be angels are squalor, red noses, certain loss of vigor, general limpidness, and some other unpleasant sequela. But, as a rule, the smallest appetites at the fashionable tables are exhibited by those shrewd girls whose natural and healthy wants have been thoroughly appeased by secret stuffing. Need we refer our readers to the historical poem, concerning Violante in the pantry, gnawing of a mutton-bone, or remind them how she gnawed it, how she clawed it, when she found herself alone? All this is a direct deceit, however, practised upon unsophisti-cated old bachelors, who, when they have made the dainty creatures theirs, find out by the butcher's book and the ocular proof what sturdy trencher-women they have married. Watch a healthy girl at supper during the intervals of dancing; she consumes by instal-ment four times as much as her partner, and seems, and is, none the worse for it. Our experience tells us that women eat, in proportion to their weight, as much as men, and are no more fairles in this respect than in the
