and completed it as far as to be able to walk through it before his death. After his assassination by Ravaillac, the king's body was laid out in state in an apartment of the old Louvre. But in the reign of Louis XIV the old tree put forth a noble shoot. At the suggestion of Colbert, the king resolved to compiete the palace and the grand gallery parallel with the river. Levau, the king's architect, had begun the principal facade; but it did not satisfy Colbert, who invited a competition of architects. The plan chosen was by Claude Perrault, who had been bred a physician.

The south, or Seine, front was also by him. The court of the Louvre is a square of three hundred and forty-eight feet. Voltaire says of the facade of the Louvre:-"It is one of the most august monuments of architecture in the world, and there is not one of the palaces of Rome whose entrances is comparable to that of the Louvre, for which we are indebted to Perrault, whom Boileau attempted to turn into ridicule."

When Louis XIV began Versailles, he grew tired of his other toy, the Louvre, part of which remained unroofed even down to the time of the great Napoleon, who completed the long picture gallery connecting the Louvre with the Tuileries, and turned the palace into a vast national museum, full of the most glorious plunder military thief ever looted.

On the 17th of February, 1820, and four following days, the body of the murdered Due de Berri, who had died begging that Louvel, his assassin, might be pardoned, lay in state in the south quadrangle of the Louvre.

One of the most historical rooms in the Louvre is the Salle de Carvatides, for here Henry IV's marriage was celebrated with Margaret de Valois, and here he lay in state after Ravaillac had struck the blow. In this chamber the stern Duc de Guise hung four of the most reckless of the Leaguers; and here Moliere built his theatre, and performed in ome of the best comedies.
