REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

The writings of a man who has both the artistic and the critical faculties highly developed cannot fail to be of the highest interest, not only to artists, but to all who have any love for art. A cordial welcome will, therefore, undoubtedly be extended to the new and revised edition of "Thoughts about Art," by Philip Gilbert Hamerton, which has just been issued by Roberts Brothers. This work was originally published in connection with the author's "Painter's Camp in the Highlands," one of the most delightful books of its kind ever written, but as the "Thoughts about Art" have a distinct and positive value of their own, a genuine service has been done the art public by their careful revision and separate publication. Mr. Hamerton has very decided opinions, the value of which depends upon the important fact that they are based upon close and scientific study, but his catholic sympathies prevent him from being dogmatic, and his suggestions about practical art-work are such as cannot fail to command the respectful attention of artists, even if they refuse to avail themselves of them. He advocates a system of study which is at once analytic and synthetic, and which, if conscientiously followed, must give the eye and the hand of the artist the highest possible training. The chapters on "Painting from Nature," "Painting from Memoranda," "The Relation between Photography and Painting," "Analysis and Synthesis in Painting," and the "Reaction from Pre-Raphaelitism" we especially commend to the attention of art-workers, for the close and accurate system of study advocated by Mr. Hamerton is very far removed from the general practices of our American painters, who especially need to have its importance impressed upon them. Several of the other chapters deal with the philosophical aspects of art, and in these Mr. Hamerton proves that his habits of close observation have not in any way interfered with his ability to accurately survey the whole field of art, and they are as interesting in style as they are instructive in substance. The chapters on "Picture Buying" and "The Housing of National Art Treasures" will prove particularly edifying to would-be connoisseurs and art patrons, and the latter especially we commend to the thoughtful consideration of those who are interested in the establishment of an art institution in this city. It is full of the most valuable practical suggestions, which we refrain from quoting, however, as an art critic has expressed an intention to make use of them as texts for various discourses on the proposed art museum in the Park and the proposed new Academy of Fine Arts. While this work is of especial interest to professional artists, it should nevertheless receive the attention of non-professional readers who wish to be informed upon art subjects, the avoidance as far as possible of technicalities rendering it particularly suitable for a popular art hand-book. For sale by Claxton, Remsen & Haffelinger.

"A Visit to My Discontented Cousin," which has been issued by Roberts Brothers as the eighth number of their "Handy Volume" series, is a series of dissertations and light gossip about nearly every subject under the sun, with a number of brief but well-told stories interspersed, and the whole bound together by the thread of a story which gives it a certain completeness. It is a genial and pleasant book, not very profound, but likely to afford good entertainment for an hour or two to a cultivated reader whose literary appetite does not demand strong food. For sale by Claxton, Remsen & Haffelinger.

"Daisy Chain," two volumes, published by D. Appleton & Co., is the third of the uniform series of the novels of Miss Yonge, now being issued. It is an attractive domestic story that has enjoyed much popularity for several years, and that will repay more than one perusal. For sale by Porter & Coates.

"Musings over the Christian Year" and "Lyra Innocentium," by Charlotte Mary Yonge, published by D. Appleton & Co., are a series of meditative essays inspired by the poems which the High Church proclivities of Keble have not prevented from being appreciated by persons of all shades of religious belief. These Musings will be enjoyed by the admirers of Keble, and many of them are especially interesting on account of giving the circumstances under which particular poems were composed, as well as reflections upon the poems themselves. The Musings are prefaced by "Gleanings from Thirty Years' Intercourse with the late Rev. John Keble," "Recollections of Hunley Parsonage," by Frances M. Wilbraham, and other reminiscences of the author of "The Christian Year." For sale by Porter & Coates.

"Poems," by Llewellyn G. Thomas, published by G. W. Carleton & Co., prove the writer to be a reader of poetry rather than a poet. None of the verses in the volume have any particular value, but some of them are barefaced imitations that are barely not plagiarisms because of their worthlessness. Forgetful that there are readers of poetry who cannot forget Shelley's "Invocation to Night," Mr. Thomas perpetrates an "Invocation to Night" which is an echo, but a very far-off one, of Shelley's, as will be seen by the opening stanza:—"Come unto the lone earth, Night! Haaste over the Eastern wave! Hitherward wing thy wished flight, For fairer far than the gaudy light Of the garish day art thou, in my sight. Spread thy pall over the grave Of the dead Sun, and with thy bright Star-inwrought mantle, clothe earth, Night!" Poe wrote a fantastic jingle entitled "Annabel Lee," and Mr. Thomas could not avoid perpetrating the following:—"Annabel! Annabel! Him whom I loved so well! O! can I hear to tell How you from Heaven fell Lured down by me! Annabel! Annabel! And some half dozen stanzas more, which it was no particular harm for Mr. Thomas to write, but which it was particularly impudent for him to publish. For sale by Porter & Coates.

A new cheap edition of "Valentine Vox, the Ventriloquist," by Henry Coakson, has just been published by T. B. Peterson & Brothers. This is a very extravagant but very funny story that has been laughed over by thousands of readers.

"Good Words for the Young," for April, published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., contains a variety of entertaining stories, sketches, and poems for young readers, and is finely illustrated by eminent artists.

The April number of "The Journal of the Franklin Institute" is filled with valuable practical and scientific papers.

From the Central News Company, No. 505 Chestnut street, we have received the latest numbers of "Punch and Fun."

Messrs. James R. Osgood & Co. announce that they have completed an arrangement which has been for some time in contemplation, for the prosecution of a subscription book trade as a new department of their business. A valuable religious work is in preparation for this trade, but while it is being completed a commencement will be made with two popular books, Parton's "Life and Times of Benjamin Franklin" and Carleton's "New Way Round the World." Ladies and gentlemen are invited to act as general or local agents. They will receive liberal compensation in commissions or salaries and part commissions after trial. The management of the subscription branch of the business will be in the hands of H. A. Brown & Co., No. 114 Tremont street, Boston.

THE SCOTT CENTENNIAL.

Sir Walter Scott was born at Edinburgh, August 15, 1771, and the centennial anniversary of his birth, therefore, is near at hand. It is proposed to celebrate it throughout the civilized world, as the centennial birth-days of Burns and of Schiller were celebrated, more or less extensively, twelve years ago. The occasion is certainly one fit to be commemorated. Scott was not only one of the greatest, but one of the purest of authors. There is no stain or blot upon his name or fame. His poems and his novels are sources of unmingled delight to millions, and contain nothing to soil or to harm the most innocent or most sensitive mind. As a poet, though he is just now underrated, or rather neglected, we are confident that the final verdict of criticism will place him among the great masters of song—with Homer, Dante, Shakespeare, and Milton. The fashion of the day runs after the subtler and seemingly more poetical poets—after those who affect to be profound and philosophical—and leaves the manly, vigorous, and picturesque verse of Scott, with its fiery narrative, its dramatic force, its graphic descriptions, and its multitudinous touches of natural beauty, to the hearty enjoyment of school boys. But the time assuredly will come when the great merits of the mighty minstrel will be recognized and enjoyed by those who can fully appreciate them, and who have the sense to see that poetry can be of the highest order, even though it be not dull nor difficult to understand, and even though it present itself to us in the form of a charming story related with a rapid fluency and a careless grace which seem so easy and so natural that we are almost inclined to despise what apparently cost so little labor, though the really critical eye can see everywhere abundant evidence of the exertion of the highest genius and most consummate literary skill. The neglect into which the poems of Scott have fallen has been shared, to some extent, by his novels, which, it is said, are pronounced rather "slow" by the young ladies who have gowned their minds with the rotteness of "Ouida" and the other "fast" novelists of the day. They are deficient, doubtless, in some of the elements of interest of the sensational school, which ransacks earth and heaven for its materials, and they are also lacking in that minute and morbid analysis of character which distinguishes the psychological novels now so popular; but in the greater and broader qualities of romance, in the portraiture of types of character, in depicting gentlemen and ladies, soldiers and statesmen, villains, vagabonds, and humorists, in scenes of dramatic power and historic interest, Scott is yet without a rival, notwithstanding the vast amount of talent expended among all civilized nations, during the last half-century, in the vain effort to imitate his novels.
