THE DAILY EVENING TELEGRAPH-PHILADELPHIA, FRIDAY, MAY 5, 1871

PARIS. From the Pall Mall Gazette.

It was certainly the "irony of events' which caused a number of ladies and gentlemen to be passing resolutions in London in favor of giving votes to women at parliamentary elections at the same time that the National Assembly was debating at Versailles and the Central Committee governing in Paris. The French National Assembly is the most striking example which has ever been seen of voting power divorced from physical or material power. It represents more votes than any representative body in the world, but its army declines to obey it, and half the voters who sent delegates to it are powerless to help it, since they are at the mercy of a victorious enemy. The result is that a contemptibly small minority of its nominal subjects, who happen really to have some material force at their disposal, have set it absolutely at defiance. Did it occur to anybody who attended the London meeting that female suffrage would have a constant tendency to reproduce this state of things? To the extent of at least one-half, deliberative assemblies would represent not physical strength but physical infirmity; and the part of the body politic which was conscious of material strength, and which on eccasions of national emergency would be exclusively called up to use it, would be per-petually overruled by coalitions between its own weaker members and the masses of the other sex. So gross a paradox can only be overlooked by those who have given no serious thought to the matter, or by those who have failed to observe how vast is the part taken by material force in all political organizations.

It is not difficult to see that the movement for female suffrage has reached its present point through the obscurity in which the essential association of government with force is systematically kept. The arguments by which successive extensions of the suffrage have been justified have really been of such a nature as to establish a case, or all but establish it, for giving votes to women. The ingenious plan of Mr. Hare and others for summing up the whole opinion of a nation with absolute accuracy irresistibly suggested that the opinion of women should be taken as well as the opinion of men. Mr. Mill, even when he did not directly advocate female suffrage, indirectly contended for it by those a priori arguments which of late have had so strange an attraction for him; and Mr. Bright's speeches invariably pointed to the conclusion that any constituency, however formed, was, provided that it was numerous, better than the existing constituencies. When Mr. Disraeli invented the conservative working man who was a devotee and not a critic of the Constitution, he laid himself open to the remark that stancher Conservatives than workmen were to be found in women; and Mr. Gladstone, who pleaded that householders, even when they paid no rates, were our own flesh and blood, could hardly have denied that our mothers, sisters, and daughters, whether they paid rates or not, were our own flesh and blood also. But the enormous majority of those who supported or opposed these extensions of the suifrage had at the bottom of their minds the consciousness that the proposal was to join voting power with material power. Multitudes, when they consist of "male persons," are vast embodiments of physical strength, even when they are unarmed. This consideration was with some the very reason for extending the suffrage.

WOMEN IN LONDON AND MEN IN | the constituencies which have apparently provailed. But they have wholly missed the feeling which gave point to these arguments -- the feeling that if the enfranchised classes became loyal and well-affected members of the body politic they would vastly strengthen the forces of cohesion by which it is kept to gether and the active forces which it may occasionally have to exert. No such notion has ever been entertained by men concerning women. If they were really compelled to think seriously about the matter, they would see that the many dangers threatening modern society would be fearfully increased if much of governing power were transferred to a class which, to speak plainly, cannot, on great emergencies, back its opinion by the exertion of physical strength. What the men best worth attending to have really admitted, or are ready to admit, is that no discernible harm could come of enfranchising a small minority of educated and able women, and that some good might be its fruit. The only arguments used by Mr. Mill and others respecting the probable advantage of feminine influence in politics which deserve consideration apply to a very small class, and this is the first thing to be recognized.

A THRILLING SCENE.

A Man Knocked Insensible with a Spittoon During a Hearing-An Affrighted Wife and Excited Spectators.

Yesterday afternoon a young man named George Williams, aged twenty-five years per-haps, was before Mayor Brush upon an information preferred by John Drew, keeper of an house in the Diamond, charging him eating with having attempted the commission of an outrageous offense upon a little daugh-ter of deponent, four years old. The hearing was being held in the Mayor's private parlor, And while the little girl was relating her story to his Honor, the father, becoming incensed, seized a large spittoon and burled it at the head of the unsuspecting defendant, who sat with his back to Drew. The spittoon struck Williams on the left side of the head, knocking him insensible. He arose from the chair on which he sat and fell upon the floor, being caught by the Assistant District Attorney, Mr. Flack, who was present for the purpose of conducting the examination. Officer Moorhead and the Mayor seized Drew, just as he was about to huri the other spittoon at Williams.

This sudden interruption of the hearing caused the wildest excitement. The wife of Drew, and mother of the little child, almost fainted, and a moment after Drew wept like a child. His little daughter sat upon his knee, while at the side of the mother stood the other, both being unconscious of what was transpiring about them. Before Drew struck Williams his brother-in-law left the room hurriedly, but did not return. It was feared he would, however, with a weapon to dispatch Williams, and a close watch was kept over him. Dr. Murdock, city physician, was called and dressed the wound. which was about an inch and three-quarters in length and an inch deep.

Williams did not return to consciousness until about seven o'clock, three hours after the accident occurred. He says he is from Baltimore, and has been here two weeks. The hearing will be resumed on Wednesday. The spittoon was broken into a hundred pieces perhaps. The scene in the Mayor's office was the most thrilling our reporter ever witnessed, and there was not one in the room, save his Honor, who pos-sessed self-control throughout. Williams occupied a cell in the lock-up last night .- Pittsburg Commercial, yesterday.

The time may come, they said, when the masses may be able and willing to put forth all their slumbering power, but they are less likely to exert it brutally if they have the means of expressing their opinions freely and giving effect to them peacefully. Others were affected in a different way by the vast reserve of physical strength in the masses. The inherent power of numbers, they urged, is so great that, when united to voting power, it must bear down all other influences. The proposal to give votes to women, though superficially similar to plans for enfranchising large numbers of men, is wholly and radically unlike them. For the first time in European history it is seriously suggested that a vast multitude of persons shall be admitted to political power in a case where multitude simply means multiplied weak-ness. The whole of the conditions of political society would be altered by such an experiment, and no human being can say more of its probable consequences than that they would certainly tend towards anarchy. The wholesale admission in America of the negroes of the Southern States to voteswhich, insulting as the comparison seems, is the only precedent in point-was really a contrivance of the party which commanded the material strength in the North to provide itself with a vast amount of voting power to be used in aid of its generals and armies. Neither Republicans nor radicals have the faintest intention of submitting to negro opinion, if it should assert itself independently. If female suffrage were established, it would only be maintained by a close alliance between female politicians and some one confederacy of men which was powerful enough to hold its own without their assistance. The objection of certain members of Parliament, which at the meeting was treated as frivolous and selfish, that their seats would be put in jeopardy by giving women votes, seems to us an extremely grave and formi-dable consideration started in a rather narrow

If the ladies who are earnestly engaged in the agitation could bring themselves to consider what are the admissions which sensible men are ready to make with regard to their sex, they might possibly be induced to limit their endeavors, and thus to aim at objects which are not wholly unattainable. Whatever be the opinions of one sex on the physical and intellectual inferiority of the other, no observant or thoughtful man denies the existence in considerable numbers of very able women, approaching closely in some few cases to the highest standard of ability amongst men, and in many more riving far above the level of mediocrity. Some of these women are practically disqualified for political-life by absorbing maternal or conjugal duties; but there are others who are not so, and any expedient by which they could be severed from their sisters and admitted to the political privileges enjoyed by the men with whom they rank intellectually is entitled to respectful consideration. We do not mean to say that we have any plan of our own to propose, but it is plain, that the present movement is kept alive by a small majority of unmarried, childless, or widowed women, most of them possessing a good deal of mental cultivation; and this small class injures its own cause by associating it with the supposed interests of an hysterical multitude. Any section of the community which wishes to obtain political equality with the privileged classes by peaceful means ought carefully to study the admissions made by those classes. No doubt these ladies and their male supposters conceive that they have done this. They repeat all the old arguments for adding more and more men to
