THE GAS RING.

For years the people have noticed the power wielded by this Ring, and have complained time and time again at its arrogance and presumption, but without avail.

Now we ask all good citizens, Should such a state of affairs exist? Should they be permitted to continue? The matter of the appropriation of half a million of dollars to this body will come up for action at the next meeting of Councils.

After this act, we might almost say of vandalism, the trustees have entered into contracts for the building of new works, and impudently ask the tax-payers for the money to carry them out.

But aside from the fact that in this action in regard to the proposed new Gas Works the Ring has proceeded against law, and we take it, in violation of the oath of office, other and serious charges may, with propriety and truth, be preferred against the men who compose it.

In view of all these facts, we speak for the people, and demand that the issue be fairly and squarely made between them and the Ring. Let the members of Select Council who have any regard for the public interests, or for their own reputation as honest men, refuse positively to authorize the loan of half a million dollars demanded by the Gas Trustees.

BOUGHT REPUTATIONS.

Here we have the inevitable Victor Hugo out again before the bloody background of ruined France, bowing and smirking like Sir Andrew Aguecheek when "dancing corantos to show the excellent constitution of his legs."

When we call to mind, without prejudice, that the only actual work ever accomplished by this Hugo was the writing of some wonderful lyric poetry, and of some very graphic and clever novels, which were advertised as no others ever published, we are charitable enough to suspect that this gasconade is not the eruption, as it seems, of a monstrous diseased vanity, but a shrewd advertisement of himself, and consequently of his wares.

The system of laudation acts and reacts, too, like circles in water. Nor is it only sham pretenders who thus gild their tawdry reputations. There are among these men writers of merit, and clergymen who are working honestly to help their fellow-men.

Now we ask all good citizens, Should such a state of affairs exist? Should they be permitted to continue? The matter of the appropriation of half a million of dollars to this body will come up for action at the next meeting of Councils.

After this act, we might almost say of vandalism, the trustees have entered into contracts for the building of new works, and impudently ask the tax-payers for the money to carry them out.

THE POPE'S DENUNCIATION OF LIBERAL CATHOLICISM.

A cable telegram from Paris states that "the Pope, in reply to an address of sympathy from the French Catholics, praises the zeal they exhibit in the cause of the Church and himself, and denounces liberal Catholicism as an evil as formidable as the Revolution or the Commune."

In that country the representative of the old Bourbon line of monarchs, the Count de Chambord, is now a somewhat formidable candidate for the throne; and while in his late manifesto he expressed his readiness to condone all ordinary political offenses, and to keep step with the progress of the age in all minor points of politics, he avowed an unalterable determination to cast the whole weight of French influence in support of the Pope.

candidate for the French throne whose success would furnish a new and powerful champion of Papal power. In former ages religious feeling formed the basis of nearly all political combinations; but there is considerable novelty in the spectacle of religion being made a controlling element of national politics at the present day, and the movement referred to possesses an especial interest on this account.

YESTERDAY an officer, who has the reputation of being one of the most faithful and most efficient members of the police force, was shot down while in the performance of his duty by a wretch whose hands have already been stained with blood, but who, by some mysterious influence, has hitherto been able to escape punishment for his crimes.
