THE FINE ARTS.

The School of Design for Women. The School of Design for Women in this city has never received from the public at large the attention it deserves as the first successful attempt for the practical training of women for an honorable profession by which they may be enabled to earn their bread and butter. The difficulty which women find in obtaining remanerative employment, and the difficulties in the way obtaining suitable training for such descriptions of remunerative labor as they are able to perform, are the real grievances that give vitality to all the women's rights agitation of the present day. The number of women who are compelled to do something for their own support is rapidly increasing every day; and every consideration of humanity, justice, and the public welfare demands that more avenues of employment shall be opened to them, and every effort to provide for the great necessities of the situation is entitled to hearty co-operation and encouragement. The organization of the School of Design for Women was, we believe, the first practical attempt ever made in this country to give women a thorough professiona, training. The school was established with a plain, practical object, which has been strictly adhered to, the only changes made since its foundation being those necessary for the perfection and improvement of the original plan. The school does not profess, and its conductors probably do not desire, to make artists of the pupils, but the single aim is to educate a race of industrial designers, who will not only be able to earn good wages for good work, but who will be valuable auxiliaries for the promotion of the interests of American i dustry. To establish this school upon a permanent basis has required a long and severe struggle, and much yet remains to be done before it will be in a position to do all the good that it is capable of dolog. Up to the present time the efforts of its principal and his chief backers have been largely directed to procuring a building free from incumbrance, and to filling it with models, books, and all the necessary appliances for carrying on a system of Industrial Art Education. With the aid of donations from the State, several liberal bequests, and contributions of greater or less amount from persons who felt an interest in the institution. this has now been accomplished. The School of Design stands to-day in possession of property of much value, and well supplied with facilities for carrying out the objects of its founders, but hampered by the lack of a sure and permanent revenue sufficient for its support. The fees paid by the students are very small, and would be wholly inadequate for the support of the school if all contributed something. Many of the pupils, however, pay nothing, and it would be very desirable if the institution could be made entirely free to all who desire to avail themselves of its advantages. The great value of the School of Design consists in the fact that it disciplines its pupils, and that a young woman, from the first moment that she enters its doors, must submit to rules which are strictly enforced, and which compel her to work. . The success of such an institution, and its claims upon the regards of the community.depend upon its sending out trained workers. and the thorough system of education which trains the eye, the hand, the intellect, and stimulates all the inventive faculties, while inculcating principles of good taste, gives women just what they must have to enable them to compete with men in the struggle for the means of living. The School of Design being what it is, it would have been suicidal for its managers to have amalgamated it with the Academy of Fine Arts, the objects of which, so far as it has any objects, and the educational system of which, so far as it has any system, are totally different. The School of Design was established for a distinct purpose, which should never be lost sight of, and it is at least doubtful whether that purpose can be carried out properly in connection with any other institution whatever. So far from uniting it with the Academy of Fine Arts, the friends of the Design, having brought it to it present state of perfection, should be more than ever interested in establishing it upon a firm foundation, and we sincerely hope that all who care for the advancement of women, or for the welfare of those women who are compelled to earn their daily bread, will feel it incumbent upon them to give this school the substantial aid it needs. We understand that the talked-of union with the Academy of Fine Aris has been definitely abandoned, and that a decided effort will now be made to secure such an endowment as will place the School of Design in a condition that it will not be compelled to live from hand to mouth or to depend upon irregular contributions. For this effort we ask the cordial cooperation of the people of Philadelphia, for it is in every way worthy of their liberal support. Large sums of money are given every year to colleges and other educational institutions, to hospitals and innumerable charities, and there is no good reason why some of the wealth bestowed for the purpose of doing good should not go to the modest institution on Penn Square, which carries on its work, not of charity but of beneficence, so quietly and unostentationsly that many who ought to feel a cordial interest in it scarcely know of its existence. There are very many persons in this city who are perfectly well able to give to this school enough money to found one or more scholarships, and there are many more who are able to give a thousand, a hundred, ten, or even five dollars towards making the School of Design a self-supporting institution. If every woman who believes in the capabilities of her sex for doing something better than kitchen drudgery, or plying the needle over slop-work furnished by the cheap clothing houses, would extend some aid, and if every man who believes that the interests of society demand a practical settlement of the great question of women's work and wages would give according to his means, the Philadelphia School of Design for Women would not only be placed out of the reach of the vicissitudes of fortune, but its usefulness would be increased tenfold.

Other Art Matters. -Mr. D. R. Knight is just putting the finishing touches upon a picture that has been on his easel for several months. The subject is historical, and represents an incident to which the origin of the Guelph and Ghibelline contests in Florence was ascribed. The direct inspiration of the picture is the following passage from Rogers' "Ital:y"-

To Florence, when ('twas in a street behind The church and convent of the Holy Cross—There is the house—that house of the Donati; Towerless, and left long since, but to the last Braving assault—all rugged, all emboss'd Below, and all distinguished by the rings of brass, that held in war and festival time. Their family standard)—fatal was the day To Florence, when at morn, at the ninth hour, A noble dame in weeds of widowhood, Weeds to be worn hereafter by so many, Stood at her door; and like a sorceress fung Her dazzling spell. Subtle she was and rich, Rich in a hidden pearl of heavenly light, Rich in a hidden pearl of heavenly light,
Her daughter's beauty; and too well she knew
Its vaiue! Fatiently she stood and watch'd,
Nor stood alone—but spoke not. In her breast
Her purpose lay; and as a youth pass'd by,
Clad for the nuptial rite, she smiled and said,
Lifting a corner of the maiden's vell,
"This have I treasured up in secret for thee,
This hast thou lost!" He gazed and was undone!
Forgetting—not forgot—he broke the bond,
And paid the penalty, losing his life,
At the bridge foot; and hence a world of woe."
Do not calledes to the same circumstance in the Donte alludes to the same circumstance in the sixteenth canto of the "Paradiso," when he says:-

"O Buondelmonte, how in evil hour Many would be rejoicing who are sad
If God had thee surrendered to the Ema
The first time that thou cam's to the city."

In plain prose the story is, that as Giovanni Buondelmonte was on the point of marrying a lady of the Amadel family, a widow lady, allied to the Do ati, made him break his engagement in the man er described. The Amadel avenged this insult by attacking and killing him at the foot of the Ponte Vecchio, and the result was the contests which eventually destroyed the liberties of the city.

In Mr. Knight's picture a crowd of brilliantly d'essed young men are coming down a picturesque Florentine street, and form a richly colored group on the right of the canvas. On the left is a stately dame titting a veil from and pointing to a pale damsel seated upon a stone step near the carved and embossed door of the mansion. Buondelmonte starts with surprise at this vision of loveliness, and it is evident that he is already conquered by the spell of the sorceress, while behind him his companions seem scarcely less startled than himself. Above the carved and embossed doorway floats the embroidered standard, while in the distance are seen the characteristic roofs and towers of Florentine architecture. The coloring of the picture is remarkably rich and harmonious, and is purer in tone than any of Mr. Knight's previous works, We believe that this work will shortly be placed upon public exhibition.

-Mr. George F. Wright, a New England artist who has recently settled in Philadelphia, has just completed a half-length portrait of General Meade and smaller ones of Messrs. Robert Craig and F. F. Mackay, the well-known actors. General Meade is represented in full-dress uniform; and if not the best, it is certainly one of the best likenesses he has ever had taken. The face and the hands are very carefully painted, the artist having bestowed great pains upon the modelling of all the characteristic features of the General's picturesque presence. The portraits of Mesers. Craig and Mackay are also very ereditable performances, and will readily be recognized by their admirers as excellent likenesses.

-Mr. Howard Roberts has just completed a very charming portrait-bust of a Philadelphia beauty, which is an improvement on his previous efforts, The face is one of much refinement, and is full of character, the artist having been particularly happy in giving his work a life-like and animated look, The pose is remarkably elegant, a very slight inclination of the head to one side giving it an air of graceful coquetry] that is the more pleasing as it is far removed from anything like affectation. There is no sculptor with whose works we are acquainted who understands better than Mr. Roberts how to treat a fine point like this, for it is just in such matters that the artistic faculty displays itself most decidedly, and by which the true artist is distinguished from the mere modeller and worker in marble. The hair in the bust under consideration is rolled back from the forehead in easy, unconventional folds, and the head is covered with a lace vell which falls gracefully upon the shoulders. The same refinement and artistic good taste are shown in the treatment of all the accessories as in the face; and, apart from all question of resemblance to the model, this bust-upon which one of the most thoughtful and conscientious artists in Philadelphia has lavished his best skill-will be certain to command attention simply as a very beautiful work of
