There is generally a sad omission of these in planting of most residences; for while they possess all the beauty of other trees in summer, they add in the highest degree to a cheerful appearance in winter, and are of eminent utility in sheltering There was a silence when he finished, un from wintry winds. We have heard and read rules put together. This is, as we have mentioned on former occasions, to remove the roots with a large portion of the earth upon them.-"I want no thanks," replied the stranger If they are torn out of the soil and laid bare, even for a minute only, there is but a small chance of the tree surviving; but if the earth it is nearly impossible to kill the tree, no matter what kind of neglect or abuse it may receive. The Balsam Fir is one of the most easily transplanted of evergreens; under very careful management it will often live even if the roots are denuded, but with the Hemlock, the life of the man whose brutal deed White Pine, and some others, it is next to im-The man bowed his head in shame, and frozen, and there is plenty of snow to favor the heavy, may be easily slid by means of draughtropes attached to horses, in an erect posture up an inclined plane, made of plank, to the sled. Now, will not such of our readers as may 4 find it practicable, undertake this business at once, and not wait for a more convenient season? We have known an instance where a few dollars expenditure in labor of this kind has been repaid more than a thousand per cent. in saving fuel, by sheltering from winds, to say nothing of the comfort and satisfaction which every member of the family must enjoy, when the dwelling is surrounded by these perpetual comforts and sources of pleasure.

Nothing adds more to the convenience and finished appearance, when the cost and labor is taken into account, than handsomely laid out and neatly kept gravel walks. Where gravel can be obtained within a few miles, it may be very easily carried on sleds. It should be deposited as near as may he to the place where it is wanted; and if placed on a temporary floor I or platform of plank, it may be more easily 3 shovelled into the wheelbarrow or hand cart, when applied to the walk in the spring.

these suggestions during the present season, where circumstances require or admit of it. Country Gentleman.

CORN COBS.

The truth will soon out, and farmers who have been seized with such a terrible-fit of economy, in the use of corn cobe, will have to yield to the light of common sense and reason. Dr. Charles T. Jackson, of Boston, informs the Patent Office reople that he has analyzed the corn cob, and firds that it contains 4 1-2 parts in one hundred of nutritive matter, consisting of gum, starch and dextrine. From this it appears that it is scarcely more value to consume as food than as fuel. This analysis being cor-rect, no good farmer can afford to spend his ing corn broad cast, or in drills, for fodder, with an absolute certainty of good results in rent crystal; hydrogen gar would become to economise fcol.—Scientific Farmer.
