LONG AGO.

BY II. BEDWNELL.

When at eve I sit alone. Thinking of the Past and Gone, While the clock with drowsy anger Marks how slow the minutes linger, And the embers limly burning Tell of life to dust returning: Then my lenely chair around, With a solemn mournful sound, With a murmnr soft and low, Conles the Ghost of Long Ago. Ogn by one I count them o'er,

Voices that are heard no more: & Tears that loving checks have wet, Words whose music linger yet, Hely faces, pale and fair, Ebadowy locks of waving hair, Gentle sighe aud whispers denr, Songs forgotten many a year, Lips of dewy fragrance, eyes, Brighter, bluer than the skice, Odors breathed from Paradisa.

And the gentle shadows clide. Softly murniuring at my side, Till the long and gloomy day, Ail forgotten fades away.

Thus, when I sit, all alone, Dreaming o'er the Past and Gone, All around me, soft and low, Come the Ghosts of Long Ago.

THE WIDOW'S BEAU.

Services had commenced in the next lit sanctuary which the inhabitants of Fairunt had consecrated to the service of od. The minister had reached the psalm al scripture lesson, and the first line of he opening hymn. The eyes of the peole were fixed intently on him. for he was of only a good, sound, cloquent preacher, ut ho was a fine looking one, too, and thus And then she proceeded to the table and reclaimed the attention, not only of the helped herself to a block of putoh work, inrie, but false worshipers. The house was sery still—the clear, inclodious tones of the received she sat, down in the only vacant pleaker were the only sounds that throbbed on the balmy, golden air, which the midummer Sabbath morn had breathed into that holy place. The first syllable of the second line was trembling upon his lips; which latter had already been homed on to a square piece of cloth, and the second line was trembling upon his lips; whole when completed, was designed to spen a rustle at the door, and the entrance ben a rustle at the door, and the entrance solved the charm. In a second every eye bill, and speaks to no one. Kyery body won-turned from the pulpit to the broad aisle, and watched with more than ordinary carries the progress of the couple. A most sudging of ellows there was ay, and how many whispers, too.
