

ADDRESS

TO HIS EXCELLENCY GOVERNOR PATERSON.
SIR,

AMIDST the numerous addresses which have been presented since your late appointment, the Bar of New-Jersey beg leave to solicit your attention. As friends and as brothers we address you; and if, in this testimonial of respect and veneration for your character, we should depart from the usual stile of congratulation, we hope the feelings which occasion the departure, will plead our apology. The profession in which we labour is of so delicate a nature, that to preserve the character of a gentleman with fellow-practitioners and deserve the noble appellation of an honest man with the rest of mankind, requires a propriety of conduct which can be claimed by few, but which ought to be aimed at by all. Perhaps no man ever practised at the bar, who so fully arrived at this desirable point as yourself; and whilst you afford an eminent example of moral rectitude and enlightened understanding, you repel the illiberal idea that strict virtue is incompatible with the practice of the forum. Since the interest of the state calls the exercise of your abilities from the bar, we look forward with pleasure to that equal distribution of justice, which must be the consequence of your judgment and experience, when you preface as chancellor, of the state. In this point of view, sir, you are not lost to the profession; and as citizens, we enjoy the prospect of every benefit which can result from an efficient and guarded administration. As no one can better understand the interests of the community, your own benevolence and the general affection for your person, will conspire to accomplish our political harmony, which will at once give us weight in the national government, and influence the prosperity of the union. That your constant and successful exertions in your late public character, should meet with the utmost gratitude this state could display, ought to have been expected—but very few official appointments have, like your own, combined all ranks of people in one common bond of affection.

Under your auspices, sir, we are become a band of brothers; every whisper of suspicion will be banished: and whilst we, as a profession, bid adieu to your Excellency, as the most distinguished member of it, we, at the same time, embrace you as the ruler of a free enlightened people. That the cares of office may set lightly on your brow, is our sincerest wish—Be firm!—for Heaven smiles on conscious rectitude: And long may you live to govern our interests and our hearts.

At the request and in behalf of the Bar of New-Jersey.

JOSEPH BLOOMFIELD, Attorney-General.

November 13, 1790.

GENTLEMEN,

YOUR address affects me in a most sensible manner: It flows from the heart: It comes from friends and from brothers:—I receive it as such; and as such, I feel it. The testimonial you present in favor of my private profession and public character, is expressed in the most obliging terms. In return, be pleased to accept the warm effusions of a grateful heart: To live in your affection and esteem is my fervent wish, and shall be my continual study. To effect this desirable end, my cares and efforts shall be directed to promote the freedom and happiness of the good people of this state, to advance our national prosperity; and to those numerous and diversified objects, which result from the administration of a free government, it is the full purpose of my soul to act with firmness, uniformity and decision; to make general principles, and not temporising expedients, the constitution and law of the land, and not the politics of the moment, the rule of my conduct. While thus I act, conscious rectitude will smooth the brow of care, and administer consolation and support in the most difficult and trying state of things.

Candor, liberality of sentiment, and moral rectitude, have, I well know, been always held in high estimation by the advocates of this state: These, indeed, are virtues useful and ornamental in every profession, and in none more so than that of the law: May they ever decorate the Bar of New-Jersey! The professors of the law, have distinguished themselves in behalf of the violated rights of mankind; have been eminently useful in the late revolution, and in the formation and establishment of our national government. In this point of view, they are dear to every friend of freedom; and it is not without a degree of professional pride, that I behold that long list of juridical names, which illumine and adorn the patriot roll of America.

In the administration of public affairs, it is a pleasing and animating circumstance, that in every measure which will conduce to the general interest of the state, or of the union at large, the executive can confidently rely upon the aid and cordial co-operation of the gentlemen of the law. But notwithstanding these encouraging assurances, it is not without much diffidence and anxiety, that I enter upon the execution of the important trust committed to my care. The scene is new—the task is arduous. Alas! gentlemen—I fear—that I shall often regret my acceptance of the honorable office which I now occupy—and wish—that I had continued with you a fellow-practitioner at the Bar. There I formed my friendships—there I passed the prime of my life, and expected to pass the evening of my days: There—I have often seen and experienced your candour and politeness—your generosity of sentiment and elevation of soul. Memory will frequently bring to my view those social hours, in which we lived as brothers, and in which we mingled the "feast of reason and the flow of soul"—hours, which I shall muse upon with pleasing melancholy! and sweetest luxury of thought!

Go, gentlemen, and be happy—go, and still continue to exercise those virtues and talents, the display of which has rendered you conspicuous, and merited the esteem and confidence of your fellow citizens:—go, and may you long live an ornament to the profession in which you labour, and a blessing to the society in which you live.

WILLIAM PATERSON.

LONDON, Sept. 2.

IN the year 1762, when success attended the British arms in every quarter of the globe, this country derived near ten millions sterling of specie from the different captures made by the fleet and army. Such an influx of wealth, invigorated commerce and encouraged industry, while it raised the spirit of the nation to a pitch of enthusiasm, that rendered our men invincible against any superiority of numbers.

Tuesday a meeting of the privy council was held at the cockpit, summoned for the purpose of taking into consideration a report of Sir Joseph Banks, on the general question of admitting wheat, the produce of the United States of America, detained at the ports of Liverpool, &c.

It was not sufficient for the French to be free, but they must be forward; "they would not be good, but they must be too good."—Having obtained all the liberty a nation should wish or want, they pervert the very first powers of it, by the annihilation of rank and title, to the very ruin and destruction of honour, the great assetor of freedom, and the very thing which emancipated that kingdom; for now, since it is universally allowed that

"Order is Heaven's first law; and this confests'd,
Some are and must be greater than the rest;

Flattery will bow its head to money and to office; Placemen and monied men will bear all the sway; and the great badge of superiority, from henceforth will not be ingenious merit, but distatorial power.

Sept. 14. The Spanish Ambassador, it is asserted, is in hourly expectation of receiving dispatches, which were to determine whether he is to abide longer with us, or bid adieu to a country which, from long residence, and habit of intimacy with most of our nobility and gentry, he is particularly attached to. His excellency has been heard more than once to declare to his friends, during the present dispute, that he hoped he should not be under the painful necessity of leaving them directly.

The last letters from Spain contradict the accounts of the emperor of Morocco's assassination—though his cruelties and caprices every day subject him to such an accident. He is, however, represented as a warm friend (if such a man can be called a friend) to the English, whose cause he espouses upon every occasion.

Considerable quantities of American pot-ashes having been condemned by the Assaymasters, people skilled in that manufacture, have been led to make several experiments to discover the causes of its defects and impurity. The great evil which injures the sale, and very much reduces the value of some of the American pot-ash, arises from foreign matters, such as common salt and earth, being accidentally or designedly mixed with it. People vending or dealing in this article may save themselves the trouble and disgrace of sending an adulterated or faulty kind to market, if they will only [previously] observe the following method for trying its quality.—Take some pot-ash and dissolve it in water: Let there be as much pot-ash as the water will dissolve. Then plunge a piece of silver coin, or any thin plate of silver into the solution. If the pot-ash contains any inflammable or improper mixtures, it will change the silver to a dark or black colour, in the same manner as if it had been over the steam of burning sulphur—if the pot-ash is pure the silver will remain bright.—Upon the experiment being made should it be discovered to be bad, the evil can be remedied only by dissolving the whole quantity in pure water, and boiling it down, and fluxing it a second time; or it may be made into pearl-ashes, by calcination, with little expence.

An eminent physician, whose name we are not at liberty to mention, has obliged us with a list of Epidemic disorders now raging in England: among which are the following.—SORE THROAT.—This, he observes, although apparently infectious is peculiar only to certain inhabitants of the street called Old-Baily, and frequently proves fatal to six or eight at a time.—N. B. It never affects the patient but once, and always ends in suffocation. Of late, physicians have recommended long sea voyages, to persons so bad as to be in danger of this distemper—but it is always better to prevent than to cure—and very useful directions for prevention may be found by applying to the Philanthropic Society, or the Sunday schools.

GAMING is a fever, or feverish affection of the chronickind—very rarely proving soon fatal; but if the patient has once caught it, seldom leaves him, should he live ever so long.—The paroxysms of the distemper resemble those of the ague, that is, are cold and hot fits—the discharge of yellow matter, leaves the patient very low, and frequently a delirium comes on, ending in sudden death. In some patients he has observed a number of black and red spots, which he considers as very unfavourable symptoms.—The disorder is not hereditary, nor communicable without coming in contact with those black and red spots. It has been known to leave the patient for several years, and afterwards return. When this is the case, he observes that it is always fatal, a mortification ensuing. In younger patients a mortification properly treated and followed up by bitters, has made a cure, but the utmost care in this case must be taken to prevent a relapse.

DUBLIN, August 31.

The shortness of the turns in a small and ill laid out-course, occasioned accidents to horses and jockies during the races at Athlone. Three of the jockies lie dangerously ill, and three of the running horses are incapacitated from ever appearing on the turf in future. From the vast concourse of people, many accidents happened to the spectators, amongst whom was a stay-maker, who on Tuesday was killed by a horseman having in full speed overturned him with such violence, that his ribs were all broke.

On Monday a curious case came on to be tried at Alderman Emerson's police-office: "A Liberty weaver sold his Cara Sposa to a friend for a guinea and a shilling, and marched her home to the residence of her purchaser. The morning following, the lady not liking the attentions of her new Lord, returned to her former lover, and refused to ratify his bargain with the purchaser, who in consequence applied to the police-office in in order to re-obtain his purchase money.—About 200 weavers attended the discussion. Several of the Weavers-square Ciceros harangued on the occasion; but the plaintiff was non-suited.

MONTEGO-BAY, Oct. 2.

Our late lieutenant-governor general Clarke, accompanied by Major M'Mordo, sailed from Portsmouth the 10th of August, in the Thynne-Packet-boat, for Quebec, being appointed lieutenant-governor of that province.

The inhabitants of Honduras, having surmounted the fear of any present disturbance, have again employed their negroes in their usual occupation of falling wood and preparing it for market.

PITTSBURGH, November 6.

No authentic accounts have yet been received from the troops out on the expedition, but there are a great many different reports through the country; these are entirely without foundation, and must be the fabrication of some persons who have little else to do. As soon as we receive any account that may be depended on, we shall undoubtedly publish it for the information of our readers.

Extract of a letter from Andrew Elicott, Esquire, to his friend in this town, dated Presque Isle, October 11, 1790.

"I yesterday completed the survey of the territory annexed to the State of Pennsylvania, after much difficulty and hardship. The land contained in this survey is generally good, and from its peculiar situation an important object to the State. The Indians did not appear to be well disposed towards the execution of our business, but after a treaty and receiving some small presents, accompanied with rum and tobacco, permitted us to go on."

RICHMOND, (Virg.) Nov. 11.

The last accounts from Kentucky, say, an advanced party of our troops came up with a number of Indians on the banks of the Ohio, killed 15, and took 25 prisoners—after the prisoners were examined, 15 were found to be white men, and are now in Fayette jail, Lexington.

Yesterday the general Assembly of this Commonwealth proceeded to elect a Senator of the United States, in the room of the Honorable WILLIAM GRAYSON, Esq. deceased, and a majority of votes was found in favor of JAMES MONROE, Esq.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 12.

Samuel Sterett, William Pinkney, Joshua Seney, William Vans Murray, Philip Key, and Upton Sheredine, Esq's. are elected federal representatives of the state of Maryland.

The Hon. George Dent, Esq. hath been unanimously chosen Speaker of the House of Delegates, now sitting, in the General Assembly of this State, at Annapolis.

WILMINGTON, Nov. 13.

On Monday, the 8th inst. commenced the election for a representative in Congress from this state, when the Hon. John Vining, Esq. was re-elected in New-Castle and Kent counties, by a very large majority.

BURLINGTON, November 10.

At a meeting of the Burlington Society, for the promotion of Agriculture and Domestic Manufactures, on Saturday the 6th of November, 1790.

Resolved, That notice be given to the candidates for the premium offered by this society in their resolution of the 3d day of April last, for the best quantity of cheese, not less than 300 weight to be made in this country, that a room is provided at the house of Mr. Alexander McGregor, hatter, next door to the house of Bowes Reed, Esq. in Burlington, for the reception of such parcels of cheese as may be delivered prior to the first Saturday in January next, on which day the premium will be adjudged.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 5.

We hear from Connecticut that Pierpoint Edwards, Esq. who was lately chosen one of the representatives from that state in Congress, has declined serving.

Died on Saturday, Mrs. Butler, the amiable and much respected consort of the Hon. Pierce Butler, Esq. senator of the United States from the state of South Carolina.

Extract of a letter from Bristol, Sept.

"The famous Herschell is about to publish some new observations upon the planetary system. With respect to those already made on the moon, if his glasses have not misled him, the deductions will give us a good deal of insight into the real nature of that planet.—From the information of his telescope, several burning mountains, commonly called Volcanoes, do there exist; and if such an element as fire does there exist; there must be certainly such a fluid as air to support it; and from hence we may count upon the reality of an atmosphere, about our attendant Satellite. By a peculiar lucid whiteness always plainly dis-
