TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 13, 1790.

RESPECTFULLY REPORTS,

RESPECTIVILLY REPORTS,

TO procure for the landholders the affificance of loans, is the great defideratum. Supposing other difficulties furmounted, and a fund created, composed partly of coin and partly of land, yet the benefit contemplated could only then be obtained, by the bank's advancing them its notes for the whole, or part, of the value of the lands they had subscribed to the stock. If this advance was small, the relief aimed at would not be given; if it was large, the quantity of notes issued would be a cause of disfrust, and if received at all, they would be likely to return speedily upon the bank for payment; which, after exhausting its coin, might be under a necessity of turning its lands into money, at any price that could be obtained for them, to the irreparable prejudice of the proprietors.

could be obtained for them, to the irreparable prejudice of the proprictors.

Confiderations of public advantage suggest a further wish, which is, that the bank could be established upon principles, that would cause the profits of it to redound to the immediate benefit of the State. This is contemplated by many, who speak of a national bank, but the idea seems liable to insuperable objections. To attach full confidence to an institution of this nature, it appears to be an essential ingredient in its structure, that it shall be under a private not a public direction, under the guidance of individual interest, not of public policy; which would be supposed to be, and in certain emergencies, under a feeble or too sanguine administration, would really be, liable to being too much influenced by public necessity. The suspicion of this would probably be a canker, that would continually corrode the vitals of the bank, and would be most likely to prove satal in those situations, in which the be most likely to prove fatal in those situations, in which the public good would require, that they should be most found and vigorous. It would indeed be little less than a miracle, should the credit of the bank be at the disposal of the government if in a long series of time, there was not experienced a calamitous abuse of it. It is true, that it would be the real interest of the government not to abuse it; its genuine policy to husband and cherish it with the most guarded circumspection, as an inestimable treature. But what government ever uniformly consulted its true institute. fure. But what government ever uniformly confulted its true interests, in opposition to the temptations of momentary exigencies? What nation was ever blessed with a constant succession of upright and wise administrators?

terests, in opposition to the temptations of momentary exigencies? What nation was ever blessed with a constant succession of upright and wise administrators?

The keen, steady, and as it were magnetic sense of their own interest as proprietors, in the directors of a bank, pointing invariably to its true pole, the prosperity of the institution, is the only security that can always be relied upon for a careful and prodent administration. It is therefore the only basis on which an enlightened, unqualisted and permanent considence can be expected to be erected and maintained.

The precedents of the banks established in several cities of Europe, Amsterdam, Hamburgh and others, may seem to militate against this position. Without a precise knowledge of all the peculiarities of their respective constitutions, it is difficult to pronounce how far this may be the case. That of Amsterdam however, which we best know is rather under a municipal than a governmental direction. Particular magistrates of the city, not officers of the republic, have the management of it. It is also a bank of deposit, not of loan, or circulation; consequently less liable to abuse, as well as less useful. Its general business consists in receiving money for safe keeping, which if not called for within a certain time, becomes a part of its stock, and irreclaimable: But a credit is given for it on the books of the bank, which being transferable, answers all the purposes of money.

The directors being magistrates of the city, and the stockholders in general its most influential citizens, it is evident, that the principle of private interest must be prevalent in the management of the bank. And it is equally evident, that from the nature of its operations, that principle is less effential to it, than to an infitution constituted with a view to the accommodation of the public and individuals, by direct loans and a paper circulation.

As far as may concern the aid of the bank, within the proper limits, a good government has nothing more to wish for, tha which ought to stimulate their exertions.

It will not follow from what has been faid, that the flate may not be the holder of a part of the flock of a bank, and confequently a fharer in the profits of it. It will only follow that it ought not to defire any participation in the direction of it, and therefore ought not to own the whole or principal part of the flock; for if the mass of their property should belong to the public, and if the direction of it should be in private hands, this would be to commit the interests of the state to persons not interested, or not enough interested in their proper management.

There is one thing, however, which the government owes to it-felf and to the community; at least to all that part of it, who are not flockholders; which is to referve to itfelf a right of ascertaining, as often as may be necessary, the state of the bank, excluding however all pretention to controll. This right forms an article in the primitive confliction of the bank of North-America; and its propriety stands upon the clearest reasons. If the paper of a bank is to be permitted to infinuate itself into all the revenues and receipts of a country; if it is even substituted for gold and silver in all the transactions of business, it becomes in either view a natiall the transactions of business, it becomes in either view a national concern of the first magnitude. As such, the ordinary rules of prudence require, that the government should posses the means of aftertaining, whenever it thinks fit, that so delicate a trust is executed with sidelity and care. A right of this nature is not only defirable as it respects the government; but it ought to be equally so to all those concerned in the institution; as an additional title to public and private confidence; and as a thing which can only he formidable to practices that imply mifmanagement. The pre-fumption must always be, that the characters who would be entrusted with the exercise of this right on behalf of the government, will not be deficient in the discretion which it may require; at least the admitting of this presumption cannot be deemed too great a return of confidence for that very large portion of it which the government is required to place in the bank.

Abandoning therefore ideas, which however agreeable or defi-rable, are neither practicable nor fate; the following plan for the conflitution of a National Bank, is respectfully submitted to the confideration of the house.

[For this plan, see No. 69 of this Gazette.]

These prints are the first of a feries, in which it is proposed to represent the most important events of the American Revolution.

No period of the history of man, is more interesting than that in which we have lived. The memory of scenes in which were laid the foundations of that free government, which secures our tational and individual happiness, must ever remain dear to us, and to posterity; and if national pride be in any case justifiable, and to posterity; and if national pride be in any case justifiable, Americans have a right to glory in having given to the world an example, whose influence is rapidly spreading the love of freedom through other nations, and every where ameliorating the condition of men.

To affift in preserving the memory of the illustrious events which have marked this period of our country's glory, as well as of the men who have been the most important actors in them, is the ob-men who have been the most important actors in them, is the object of this undertaking. History will do justice to an æra so important; but to be read, the language of mixing is universal, and intelligible in all nations, and every age.

As several years of his time, and a very considerable expence, are necessary to accomplish this undertaking, it would be an imprudent facrifice to the mere hope of reputation to go more deeply into it, without a probability of ultimate success:—That he may judge of the degree of this probability, Mr. Trumbull, by the advice of his friends, proposes this subscription, and flatters himself with a hope of meeting that patronage from his countrymen, which will justify his pursuing the object with ardor; and without which it is impossible that so expensive a work should be continued.

The subjects proposed to be represented, in addition to the two foregoing, of Bunker's-Hill and Quebec, are—

* The Declaration of Independence,

* BATTLE at TRENTON, * BATTLE of PRINCETOWN,

SURRENDER OF GENERAL BURGOVNE, TREATY WITH FRANCE,
BATTLE OF EUTAW SPRINGS,
* SURRENDER OF YORK-TOWN,

TREATY of PEACE, EVACUATION of NEW-YORK, RESIGNATION of General WASHINGTON, The Arch at Trenton,

INAUGURATION of the PRESIDENT of the UNITED STATES. Each picture will contain portraits of the principal characters who were prefent at the scene represented. Those marked with stars, are confiderably advanced; and the prints from the whole will be executed of the same size, and by the most eminent ca-
