MR. FENNO,

The following beautiful imitation of SHENSTONE originally appeared in the American Mercury-by giving it a place in your paper, you A SUBSCRIBER. will oblige a friend of the Author, and

WHEN night shed her solutude round, And Cynthia illumin'd the sky, When dew drops bespangled the ground, And light mist slew wantonly by; Alone to a neighbouring grove,
With partial distraction I stray'd,
There tho't of the maiden I love,
While rapture my senses betray'd.

On the wings of delufion I flew To the feet of the fair one I love,
I told her my paffion anew,
My paffion he deign'd to approve:
There faucy depicted our joy,
'Twas pleafure unmingled with woe,
'Twas happiness free from alloy,
'Twas Eden replanted below.

Reclin'd on her bosom of love, As playful, and happy as May, Lay an infant as pure as a dove,
And bright as the young flar of day;
The rofe budded fair in its face,
Truth and innocence beam'd from its eyes,
Its fmiles were the fymptoms of grace,

Its charms were the charms of the skies. My house was an inn for the poor, The beggar was often my guest, They smil'd as they went from my door, Their gratitude sweeten'd my rest.— My Delia was pleas'd to bestow— What Providence freely had given She shar'd with the children of woe,

And bade them feel thankful to heaven. While thus in fweet rapture I view'd The scene which my fancy had drawn, My feet wander'd farthro' the wood, And infenfibly trode the gay lawn;
The fweet briar lent me a rofe,
An emblem of life and its cares,
A moment it buds and it blows,
But thorns are the burthen it bears.

I smelt of the fragrance it shed, 'Twas sweet as the breathings of morn— I press'd it—low droop'd its fair head, And nothing remain'd but the thorn—

In a moment my fenses return'd,
I sunk to the depths of despair,
And as the soft vision I mourn'd, The cries of distress fill'd the air: The shepherd lay snug in his bed While dogs tore the lambs of the fold; Too late to their rescue I fled,

Their lives to the prowlers were fold. No more shall their bleatings delight; No more shall the innocent train, In froliciome gambols unite, Or sportively skip o'er the plain.

I wept o'er their carcafes torn, Their pleasures had feately began;
But perhaps had they seen the next morn,
Their lives had been slaughter'd by man:
My mind thus from ills of my own
Turn'd to those of a lower degree,
I tho't I was wretered alone,
But brutes were more more all the

But brutes were more wretched than me.

Ah Corydon why will vou love!
Why feed the fost passion in vain!
No sighs her compassion can move,
She smiles at the tale of your pain— To love her alas! is delight,
'Tis pleafure,' its blifs to my heart,
Tho' despair spreads around me her night,
Yet despair can her bleffings impart.

Tet depair can her blenings impart.

She is fair as the pride of the vale,
The lily that vies with the fnow,
Her breath is as fweet as the gale,
Where clover-fields fragrantly blow;
Her temper is fweet and ferene,
Here bosom is pure and refin'd,
Expression enlivens her mien,
And virtue enriches her mind.

She is chafte as the fleeces that fly

On the wings of the tempelt of fnow, oft pleafure oft beams in hereye, She can weep at the language of woe; Her lips utter accents of truth,
Her voice is the music of even,
Her face wears the features of youth
Of youth in the garden of heaven.

And when with the fwain of her choice And when with the Iwain of her choice
She shall wed (may the moment be nigh)
Tho' bleeding, my heart shall rejoice,
She is happy—I'll bles her—and die:
Not a tear from my eyes shall be shed,
Not a figh from my bosom artie,
In secret I'll lay down my head.

In fecret I'll lay down my head, And wait for the fair in the fkies.
