

MR. FENNO,
I send you a Poem of the well-known DELLA CRUSCA, which, I believe has never been printed in America; few, even of his greatest admirers, have ever seen it, as it is not included in the British Album.

HOWARD,
THE PHILANTHROPE.
AN ODE.
Written by ROBERT MERRY, Esquire, under the signature of DELLA CRUSCA.

THE roving Zephyr's gentle gale
That flutters in the flowery vale;
That hovers on the high hill's side,
And curls the river's rippling tide;
Shall oft, BENIGNANT HOWARD, shed
A winnow'd fragrance round thy head,
When chance at sultry noon thou'rt laid
Beneath the Aspin's quiv'ring shade.
At night no dissonance shall rise,
To chase light slumber from thine eyes;
Near thy abode no found be heard,
Unless the melancholy bird,
That leans her bosom on the spray,
Shall warble all her woes away.

Yon pearly moon that beams so bright
Upon the sable breast of night,
Has seen thy wandering footsteps go
To shores where distant billows flow,
Where Europe owns a Sultan's nod,
And smarts beneath a Tyrant's rod.
Yon pearly moon now sees thee roam
O'er Britain's Isle, thy native home,
Explore each prison cell to cheer,
Sorrow and lonely want and fear:
For still compassion bids thee wend
Towards him who has no other friend;
Towards him who all forgotten lies,
Deep channels sunk around his eyes,
While from their balls' distracted glare,
Looks forth the meagre fiend despair.
Alas for many a tedious year
His only solace was a tear;
But now by time the source is dried,
And that last solace is denied.
Methinks thro' some small grate afar,
He nightly woos the POLAR STAR;
That ever settled as his woes,
Is all the sympathy he knows.

Yes, yes, in fancy, can I feel,
The keen delights that o'er thee steal;
The look of thanks, the wretch's prayer,
In short forgetfulness of care;
The fond wife's smile, the child's caress,
And all the luxury to bliss.
O HOWARD, not the Poet's lays,
Tho' HAYLEY celebrates thy praise;
Nor yet the SENATE'S loud applause
To hail thee first in Virtue's cause;
Nor e'en the public's just design
To give the STATUE and the COIN;
Can one increasing bliss impart
To that which centers in thy heart.
On earth thy recompense is giv'n,
Already is commenc'd thy heav'n.

LONDON, August 1.

DR. KIPPIS, the well known and much respected editor of Biographia Britannica, in the address he delivered on the interment of the late Rev. Dr. Price, said, "The joy which he (Dr. Price) derived from the French Revolution has been strongly displayed to the public, and it has occasioned a discussion that will only tend to the defeat of the enemies of freedom,"
"May I never possess the head or the heart of those who do not exult in the emancipation of twenty-five millions of people from a wretched tyranny and despotism; in the diffusion of equal happiness among such numbers of men, and the prospect which is now afforded respecting the gradual melioration, and the growing, perhaps too rapid improvement, of the state of the world in general! Amidst the strange eccentricities and obliquities of the human understanding, we have seen it to be possible for the Revolution in France to be attacked by all the power of genius, by all the richness of imagery, and by all the lustre of flowery and diversified language; but the most brilliant efforts of this kind are now no more than the corruscations of the nothern lights, which diverge into a thousand lines, and entertain the eye with their various appearances, but which at best present only a splendid confusion, and soon end in total darkness."

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.
Westminster-Hall, July 16.
OLDHAM versus EMERSON.

The plaintiff, an eminent ironmonger in Holborn, had in April last purchased a horse from the defendant for 60l. for which sum he got a receipt with a security that the horse was quiet, steady, free from vice, &c. &c. But, when the plaintiff began to ride him, he would stop, plunge, start, and go back (all which the plaintiff's servant and several others swore to) upon which the horse was sent back to the defendant, who said he would write about him to a Mr. Rainbridge, his owner, who lived in the country, and would provide the plaintiff with another horse; but afterwards refused to give him either another horse, or his money: to recover which, this action was brought.

Mr. Erskine, for the defendant, insisted, that he never intended to rescind the contract; and that the plaintiff should have brought a special action on the case, instead of one for money had and received; he knew the horse was high-bred, and blooded before he bought him; and if he afterwards met the fate of Johnny Gulpin, from his ignorance in horsemanship, it was not the defendant's fault. Besides, the defendant only acted as deputy for another. Mr. Erskine then called thirteen witnesses, some of them gentlemen of property, who all knew the horse; and declared that he was gentle, well broke, well worth the money given for him, and that little boys used to ride him; and that any man who could not ride him, was not fit to ride at all.

Lord Kenyon said, that although the witnesses on both sides differed very much, there was no just reason to discredit either; a horse might one time be quiet, and another time the reverse. The plaintiff's servant was thrown, and himself in danger of his life, as appeared on evidence; and therefore the horse could not be said to answer the purposes for which the plaintiff got him. As to the defendant's acting as a deputy, the plaintiff, at the time of the contract, provided against that.

The jury, after deliberating for some time, gave their opinion, that the plaintiff should get back his money, and that each party should pay his own costs: which was agreed to.

Conclusion of M. Muguet's speech in the National Assembly, on the subject of the King's inviolability.

"In vain some unquiet spirits, always desirous of change, have persuaded themselves that the flight of one individual could change the form of Government, and reverse all the system of your constitution; in vain have they wished to play upon you their errors, and persuade you that their opinion was that of all Frenchmen; in vain some other persons, still slaves in the midst of a free people, always courtiers, never citizens, regarding only one man, when they ought to attend to the State; guided by personal interest, when they ought to be directed by the public; bowed under the yoke of habit and prejudice; devoted to an ancient idolatry, and asserting the principles of monarchy which are not attacked; attributing to the representatives of the nation intentions which they have not discovered—have withed by partial opinions to influence your determination, and anticipate your decrees. The National Assembly, without giving way to the exaggeration of the one, or the scurrility of the other, before it determine further respecting the King, will allow their spirits to calm, and will advance towards the end of its institution, and will complete the Constitution, which, whatever events may follow, must in all future time be the centre of union for the friends of liberty."
