From a late British publication, entitled, "Lines to the Memory of the Rev. Mr. JOHN WESLEY, A. M."

"ROUND Wesley's Urn no sanguine laurels bloom, No Widow's Curfes murmur on his tomb; No blood-stain'd fpectres haunt his parting hour, Grin round his bed, and o'er his pillow lour; No butcher'd Orphan glares indignant by, To feare the flumbers from his clofing eye; But PEACE comes fmiling on her Seraph wing, And steals the barb from DEATH's relenting fling: To his laft hours the good Man's meed is given, APPROVING CONSCIENCE AND APPROVING HEAVEN!"

The character of Mr. Wesley is thus delineated: "Glowing with Christian zeal and Patriot fire, With all the love that COUNTRY can inspire, With all the warmth that Genius can impart, He pours the living precept on the heart: Spreads on the darkling mind th' illumining ray, And all the glories of ETERNAL DAY. Confoles the feeble, and confirms the ftrong, And leads the timid fearlefsly along: Grief, Sickness, Sorrow, Want, his bounties share, And needy Worth becomes his guardian care. Around his board no pamper'd lacquies wait, In all the pomp of Oriental ftate. He rears no Palaces, no wide fpread plain Calls him fole Lord of all its proud domain. He courts no grandeur, and he hoards no wealth, And toil and temperance procure him health. Not even Avarice, the Vice of Age, Clouds the mild lufre of his life's laft ftage. Rich in the treafures of a feeling mind, He knows no good but that of ALL MANKIND; No selfish aim inspires his great defign, But HOLY LOVE and CHARITY DIVINE: While to the wrangling fons of noify strife, He gives th' example of a BLAMELESS LIFE."

When the late juftly celebrated Dr. Fothergill was in the height of his practice and reputation in London and Westminster, the following advertisement appeared in one of the English country newspapers:

"This is to fartify, that I John Fothergill, of Wootton Bafket, who cures all forts of glanders, informations, diffeftes, and all akermunnys of the blood both in the human and broot fpecious, am not the Dr. John Fothergill as lives in London, but his fuperer, both in art and medefon, as thofands are redly to teftafy."
